IN MEMORIAM.

Marquette Honors the Memory of the Nation's Illustrious Dead in an Appropriately Dedicatory.

Services Held at Casino Rink Saturday Afternoon—Military and Civic Organizations Present—Address of Hon. F. O. Clark Given in Full.

Preparations for one of the most impressive public demonstrations that ever occurred in Marquette had been perfected under the management of Albert Jackson Post G. A. R., last Friday, in honor of Gen. Grant's burial, and it only remained for nature to favor the event with pleasant weather on Saturday to make it one in every way suitable to the occasion and long to be remembered by the people of Marquette county.

Arrangements had been made to hold the services at the city park, where a stand had been erected and appropriately draped, and a large portrait of the deceased hung over the speaker's desk.

Such, my fellow citizens, is a brief record of the rapid rising of our dear hero, whose memory is now receiving at his burial the united honors of the civilized world.

But this rising was not the result of accident or chance, although during the country's peril, and in the early days of the rapid rising of this star of genius, there were many wise men, or those who considered themselves men, who said that his success was an accident, and that he would soon be "shelved" along with others in whom our country had trusted.

The companies and societies each made a fine appearance, and it is a matter of regret to everybody that the procession could not be formed, and move along the proposed line of march, in anticipation of which many of the private residences had been appropriately decorated.

The military and civic organizations having all arrived, the number of people in the rink must have been between six and seven hundred, the fact of there being comparatively few ladies present showing plainly that the heavy rain had kept many away.

At a quarter after 7 o'clock, Mr. M. H. Maynard, who was master of ceremonies, announced the order of exercises which would open with music.

The Chequamegon band then rendered a beautiful selection, with that perfection of execution for which it is celebrated.

Rev. Dr. Bonar then offered a short, but touching and appropriate prayer. This was succeeded by a second piece—a rare musical composition, especially suited for such an occasion—by the Chequamegons. Mr. Maynard then introduced Hon. F. O. Clark, who delivered the oration, speaking in a clear, forcible voice.

The delivery of the memorial address consumed but a half hour, and commanded the closest attention. The following is the text in full: FELLOW SOLDIERS AND FELLOW CITIZENS—By the proclamation of the chief executives of our country, state, and city, business is suspended, and we have met for a memorial service that, in common with the citizens of these states and many other countries, we may express our gratitude for the patriotic services of our great, dead hero; that we may express our appreciation of the country's loss, and shed the tear of sympathy over the memory of his sufferings and the bereavement of his family.

hour of his death, is most gratifying to the nation's pride. Soon after our hero had reached the pinnacle of fame and greatness, as president of the United States, I met a Judge from the city of St. Louis in the Palmer House at Chicago, became acquainted with him by accident, and the conversation turned upon the "rising of G. A. R. Grant." He said to me: "It is amazing!" It seems like a dream; but a few years ago Grant had a little office in the same building with myself, in the city of St. Louis. He was endeavoring to carry on an insurance business, but he made an unexpected success. He would be in our office and sit down and recount, in a most entertaining manner, the history of the war in Mexico, and discuss governmental policy like a statesman, but when it came to the insurance business, he knew little about it and seemed to care less. He lived in a small house in the suburbs of the city, which contained only two or three rooms, and he had so completely failed in making a living that his family had to be kept in a tenement house in St. Louis, and he sought to escape with his family, where he went for the purpose of going into business with his father, that he might earn bread for his family. It was perfectly apparent at that time that he was entirely out of his mental capacity, and was restless under his present condition in life, restive as a genius would be, conscious of his power, with no present opportunities to develop it. Now, to know that this man, after the lapse of but a few years, sits at the helm of government, controlling the executive affairs of this great nation, with the eyes of the world upon him as a great military hero, dazzles me, and though I know the facts and the record, I cannot comprehend it.

Such, my fellow citizens, is a brief record of the rapid rising of our dear hero, whose memory is now receiving at his burial the united honors of the civilized world.

But this rising was not the result of accident or chance, although during the country's peril, and in the early days of the rapid rising of this star of genius, there were many wise men, or those who considered themselves men, who said that his success was an accident, and that he would soon be "shelved" along with others in whom our country had trusted.

do doubt thereby smoothed the passage of our hero to the grave, by becoming fully aware of that fact. Our hero, conscious of the financial condition in which his family would be left; conscious of the importance of his military service to the events that might complete his memories of the war—that he might transmit to posterity that knowledge, and thereby do something also towards furnishing an income to his family when he should be gone.

Under that impulse and desire, he fought the king of terrors with bravery and bore up with an indomitable will that far surpassed that shown in his best days of military glory, and with death gnawing at his vitals he commanded his thoughts, his recollections and his judgment, and he did this, too, from the border of the grave; by the aid of distinguished physicians, and under the controlling providence of the Almighty God, until he had accomplished his desired object.
