Fireside of the Typical Farmer

Make this read, what ought to be more ful than the farmer's fireside, and we can swer emphatically, "Nothing this side heaven." But we have been to some farm abodes-we can not call them homes--wh if the question had been ased, "What is more cheerless than the farmer's fireside," our re-sponse would have been, "We give it up," Imagine a house that is all kitchen, no books on the shelves, no pictures on the walls, no papers on the tables. The programme is work, cat. sleep, and if there is any variation in it, it is sleep, eat, work. After a hard day's toll, the boys and girls are provided with some work until bedtime, such as churning shelling corn, or some drudgery, then they are banished into a cold, cheerless room, and promptly routed out before daylight the next morning to put on the harness and enter the same old treadmill. Is this the typical farmer's fireside! We hope not, but have no many of our readers, neighbors under whose roof they can see the living reality of our per

At about half past eight Captain perior Iron Co. is on trial and a quintette, with Miss Wyckoff at the labor disturbances on the docks. They at the tables, and Rev. E. G. Cheverton, the court. by request, read the following beautiful To.day's poem of welcome, written by a lady for the reunion and camp fire held by the Wisconsin G. A. R. post No. 10, at Oshkosh, Feb. 22:

"ATTENTION, COMRADES!" To-night, in glad reunion, Ye comrades brave and true, We extend the hand of friendsh To those who were the blue.

And, round the camp-fire's ruddy blaze, Ye'll call to mind the day When, with banners gayly streaming, Ye proudly marched away.

Fe'll recall to mind the parting From all that earth held dear; Hear again your father's blessing. See again your mother's tears.

With a sigh of bitter anguish You turned your face away. To hide from them the burning tea That dimmed your eyes that day.

You may recall one dearer yet, Whose bright eyes filled with tears As, clasped within your loving arms. You strove to quiet her fears.

And you stooped to kiss your children, With all a father's love, With a prayer to God in heaven To guard them from above.

With breaking heart you marched away
To join your brave command;
But on the brow of yonder hill
You turned and waved your hand.

Across the prairies, o'er the hills, Yeu marched with gallant tread, To meet the foe on Southern soil, Our flag above your head.

Ah, mortal pen can never tell
The hardships ye passed through;
But ages hence will speak thy praise,
Ye gallant boys in blue. Now on the cold and dreary march, Through swamp and dark ravine Now toiling on 'midst mud and mir Now fording swollen streams.

Thus onward marched ye to the strife Nor shirked your duty when The frowning mouths of rebel guns Belched forth their leaden rain.

But forward ye did bravely press Resolved to do or die; For ye had sworn to place again Our flag 'neath Southern sky.

How well ye kept your sacred oath Need ne'er be told by pen; For stars and bars will never wave O'er our loved land again.

For ye did raise the stars and stripes Above that rebel land, And tore the tongue from treason's throat, Ye brave and gallant band.

The sound of strife is heard no more: War's clouds have rolled away; And our stars but shine the brighter For that long and dreadful fray.

We welcome you to-night, To sing the old war songs again Around our camp-fire's light.

But while we join in song and mirth, And deeds of valor tell, We'll not forget those comrades brave, Those gallant boys that fell.

Some in unknown graves now lie, Yet honored be their names; The stars and stripes shall ever wave, A tribute to their fame.

The MINING JOURNAL extends its heartiest thanks to Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Volk who, after the G. A. R. camp-fire last night, visited short n the office with two large and beautiful cakes, which were presented to the force with the compliments of the Grand Army of the Republic. The cakes were so large that for once even the Mining Journal force was downed, but yet they were so fine that each man did his best to take care of them. The new variety, the "Clifton," proved the favorite, and a unanimous vote of thanks is here with returned to Mr. and Mrs. Volk for their kind remembrance of the consumers of midkind remembrance of the consumers of mid night oil.

The following is taken from the Bessemer paper, and relates to the branch shop of the Iron Bay Manufacturing company which is about to be erected at Bessemer: "Mr. D. H. Merritt arrived Monday and immediately set about making preparations for the building of his foundry and machine shops. The plans and specifications have been shown to several contractors, and the contract will be awarded within a few days. The main building will be 30x80 feet, with a boiler house 18x27 feet attached. The entire structure will be covered on the outside with corrugated iron, and lined with brick. It will rest upon a solid stone foundation, with the sills and joists bedded in gravel. The building will thus be made as solid and nearly fire-proof as possible. There will be no necessary delay in its construction, and the machinery outfit will be shipped from Marquette via LATEST DESIGNS Ashland as soon as pavigation opens."

There were three of 'em, and they were out with fish in their eye. One of the three built a nice little raft to cross a bad place in a swamp back of Partridge Island, and when he had finished it he stepped back to contemplate Paints, Varnishes, the fruit of his labors, when he found himself suddenly disappearing in a sink hole. As the cold water rose up to his arms his ago-nized yells and shuddering groans affected his companions much as green-apple colic affects the small boy. Finally they recovered from their laugh sufficiently to pull him out, when he hung his outer garments in the sun to dry and finished his fishing in a full suit of red fiannel which fluttered and flapped in the April breezes.
