These rehearsals are sometimes very funny, for no matter how well the life saver understands his duties practically, when he tries to operate on a living man and repeat his lines at the same time, he is apt to become confused and forget what to say. It was so in this in-stance. A big, brawny, bearded life saver-lay upon his back upon the floor. Another-man knelt beside him and placed one hand man knet beside him and piaced one fland upon the prostrate man's breast bone. Then he began to repeat his lines in a sing song fashion, running his words together without any regard to pause or inflection. He came to a sudden halt. He scratched his head and to a sudden halt. He scratched his head and reflected for a minute. "The stuck," said he. The captain jogged his memory, but it was of no use, and he had to give up the attempt. The captain took the patient in hand and finished the job by compressing the lower ribs of the patient to induce artificial respiration.

Van Winkle was represented this morning by a letter purporting to have been written from Sloux City. Ia., saying that the Ohio field, which caught fire one week ago, burned until to-day when the flames were extinguished. It is estimated that 35,000 barrels of oil have been consumed. The fire caught in a peculiar way. The weather was rainy and a dense mass of fog and smoke hung over the well. This, it is thought, confined near the ground gas which escaped from the well. Sparks from a passing locomotive ignified the gas and an explosion followed and the air for rods in every direction seemed to be filled. nuts, etc. These devices are reproduced in intense, till at last only one remained. For this last survivor the sailors manifested the greatest solicitude, placing the choicest deli-cacies before it, and taking every conceivable measure to prolong its life, even after it had grown too feeble to fly to the table. As its powers weakened they lifted it tenderly to the topmost pane of glass in the cabin win-dow to catch the very warmest of the sun's rays.

But the laws of climate are inexerable, and in spite of every precaution, the poor thing grew feebler and feebler. No longer able to support itself on the pane, it descended lower and lower on the cabin window, till finally it rested on the lower sill, and before long its watchful attendants were called upon to ness the last of their little friend. It rolled over from exhaustion, and after many a spasmodic kick it died.

The affection of the sailors followed it even after death. Nature had composed its limbs in an attitude of placid repose, and a suitable site being fixed upon in which to deposit the dust, it was buried.—"Voyage to Spitz-among the low growing vines. They come from a long distance back in the country, and will stand at the corner of the high road, as we read of their standing 1,800 years ago, waiting "for some man to hire them." Old men and women, young men and children, in charming faded blouses and handkerchiefs; in great weeker whele a better mytike a best of the sales room of a large wholesale dealer in cheap the salon one may see half a dozen vintage pictures in the same room, and I do not wonder at it now, having seen the ever changing compositions at Argenteuil. The rough white walls, the tender green of the vines, with the dark tones of the grapes, the faded garments of the laborers—those fine peasant types—with the sunlight over all, and the musical "chantonner" of the workers keeping time with the cutting of the vines, lend a charm indescribably fascinating. Later they begin the passage from the fields into the town. There is no restriction as to to the means of transported to the salesman's views to his companions. They agreed upon event to the passage from the fields into the town. There is no restriction as to to the means of transportation, although the large vineyard owners provide their own carts, drawn by the great Normandy horses, festioned with trailing vines artistically arranged last the control of t ranged about the harness, for in France the meanest peasant has an eye for the beautiful. meanest peasant has an eye for the beautiful.

Besides these carts one sees the grape laden

There are any number of processes of wine making, and as many methods of pressing the fruit as there are owners of vineyards, but almost every peasant has his little vineyard, and much of the wine is made in their own cellars. Here they return to first principles, the men treading the wine press and stained from head to foot with the red liquid. There they use the latest inventions for wine making. The great vats, holding 1,200 quarts, whirl rapidly by steam beneath the counter want rapacy by steam deneath the counter movement of a ponderous disk of stone; the noise of the gushing grape juice is like that of a small torreut, spouting from a tube on the right, and the dry masses of pulp ejected into a trough for the purpose on the left, everything moving in regular order—noisy, unly, labor saving. Thus, modern invention ugly, labor saving. Thus modern invention takes the poetry out of old time customs, and I turn away disgusted to seek a less modern atmosphere, a more congenial example of the good old fashioned wine press.

One may trace to its source the purple red stream that trickled down between the great stones of the village street. But I had almost forgotten the chief feat-C. F. GUNTHER, ure of it all—the peasants' dance in the open field after the work is done, with flags flying, fiddles playing, men and women in holiday attire (which in France means costumes marvelous to behold). Under a vine covered hut stand jugs of new wine, piles of seed cakes and gingerbread which pass from hand to hand as "Soft eyes look love to eyes that spake again." Under the influence of the vintage troths are plighted, matches made, men and maidens forget their shyness, and "all goes merry as a marriage bell." At night the maters appear made gay in colored papers. The young men vie with each other in feats of strength; the young women sing songs and dance the night away. It is indeed a pretty sight, and may the custom long exist and the vintage prosper, in spite of the edict of the French government that beer shall become the national beverage. The French people are loath to accept it. "For Bourbon Whiskies what," they say, "can cheer the weary, excite the strong give peace in our land as a litter of good Vin Doux?"—Paris Cor. I am glad that it begins to enter into social motives as a power, that as we are so will our children be. But I desire to emphasize the brighter side of the fact. It is not only true that a drunkard's children are liable to inherit a taste for intoxicants, and a rake's for unchastity; not only that oddities of structure, such as web toes or a Hapsburg nose, are passed down in a family line, but it is even more structure that the true tha is even more strongly true that all sorts of smoke came out of the opening made good liabits can be inherited, and the beauty put down a gaspipe. three years of the war of the rebellion there were more lives lost and property destroyed for the from mere ignorance, and negligence as a result of ignorance, than from any other cause; officers of volunteers who had no knowledge of military duties had, at the beginning large responsibilities thrust upon them prepare men for war. Drill, as a means of teaching discipline, as well as preliminary field movements, can be taught anywhere at home, in the school, the workshop or count-ing house. But the underlying elements on which the art of war is founded, upon which the stability of all government rests, can be earned only by practical experience. And this is the experience the national guard wants. In time of war the guard will become the regular army, and the volunteers and the reserve. The small regular army will be only sufficient to furnish high grade commanders and instructors for the vast army of the people. Now, war is the time for the application of teachings and principles, rather WAR'S THREE CIRCUMSTANCES All circumstances of war must be com-prised under three heads: (1) the march, (2) the camp, (3) the battle. The first and second heads can be learned in time of peace, but only the second is practiced. The most neces-sary and important of all is neglected by the national guard, except in one or two in-stances, as the march of the Twenty-second New York to Peekskill. I was not only annual, but struck with admiration for the independence of that worthy hatter. After a few years' residence in England a little scene of that description was a great freat.

Tender impractacable certain inevenients inpossible without them. But to that extent only and no further will they go, and all the grand operations of war will depend, as they ever have done, on the marching power of armies. Take, for example, the latest wars wherein troops of civilized nations have been engaged. In 1880 Gen. Roberts marched to 2000 was and eighteen guns from Kabul to great freat.

An hour later I called again. The young 10,000 men and eighteen guns from Kabul to Kandahar, a distance of 330 miles. The girl made her second appearance.

"My brother waited for you for quite ten minutes, she said to me; "he is gone to the cafe with a felend now."

"Law sever for that," I said. "When can

There she goes again. A hurt to any part of the body by contusion, caused by coming in contact violently with some other body, the contused blood in the part injured showing a dark mark to the extent of the hurt, is a bruise, As to the effect of such injuries, great or small, natural action is disturbed, the veins are clogged, circulation impeded, congestion sets in and pains ensue. Nature is impatient of any impediment to its regular order; it tries to force the circulation through its proper channels thus clogged and pain intensities. It may in minor hurts atter long and painful efforts restore the functions and by slow degrees heal itself, but pain is its signal of distress, and the greater the pain the louder it calls for help, and so long as pain lasts, it needs that help. What is that help? Something that will penetrate deeply, stimulate and soothe, and by vigorous applications sublently with some other body, the contus and the greater the pain the louder it cause for help, and so long as pain lasts, it needs that help. What is that help? Something that will penetrate deeply, stimulate and soothe, and by vigorous applications subdue the congestion. With nature's aid it clears away the obstructions, heals the injured tissue and restores. How quickly this can be done is seen in the rapid disappearance of the black marks, and this is the specific action, the healing process of St. Jacobs Oil. It is the thing needed and just what nature calls for in the cure of bruises, as thousands testify who have tried it. But the conditions in cuts and wounds are a little different, although the principles of healing are the same. The tissues are separated, lacerated and torn apart, besides being bruised, and nature's effort is intensified in trying to bring the parts together to begin the process of healing, Hardly any one would pour into a gaping wound a remedy for relief, but so soon as nature brings together the parts and they adhere, which is almost instantly, St. Jacobs Oil, used in accordance with directions for use which accompany every bottle, will magically knit together these parts and confirm the action of nature by a perfect cure, the action of nature by a perfect cure,

NEGAUNEE JUSTICE.

It Was in Great Demand Yesterday - Death of Victor Tourville-A Water Main Inadvertently Tapped-Brevities.

Justice Court Litigation.

Robert Porteous vs John Truan yesterday ready for the trial, and the case proceeded. The evidence established that the plaintiff worked sixteen days for the defendant at the latter's request, and that attempted to bring in a set-off, claiming that Porteous, while in his employ, had broken a wagon axle, and that he was responsible for the damages incurred in the Farland case. The set-off was shut out because the time for introducing such claims had passed. During the trial Truan narrowly escaped being disciplined for contempt of court. The court rendered judgment for the full amount of the claim, the cost of the suit and $5 attorney fees. HOLIDAY GOODS There is an old adage to the effect that a burnt child dreads the fire, but it cannot be said to apply in this case. Two executions will soon be issued against Truan; yet he proposes to sue Porteous for the breakage of the wagon axle and for the damages in the Farland case; and he is withholding the pay of another of his men, who will sue for it unles a settlemen, who will sue for it unles a settle-an old debtor, was about to leave for Chicago yesterday, so he had Justice Jones issue papers for his detention. The defendant settled the bill.

In the afternoon the case of Murray vs Pigott occupied Justice Primeau's attention. The action was to recover possession of some property on which Pigott is a tenant. J. Q. Adams, the attorney for the plaintiff, had but little trouble in the plaintiff, had but little trouble in easion to go out for some letters bearing on the case, and because he was absent a few minutes he was accused by Pigott of manufacturing evidence. They Tapped a Main.

Yesterday morning some laborers, while litching on Pioneer avenue, encountered an obstruction that they took to be a log. They hit it several whacks, and succeeded in obtaining a result similar to that achieved by Moses when he smote the rock, as a torrent of water responded to their blows. The obstruction was the HAGER & JOHNASON. elbow of a water main, and their blows displaced it. The water had to be shut off, and superintendent Benneshek and a large force of laborers have been at work ever since repairing the damage done.

'Twas only a jest, and we're parting forever,
The words on our lips, pale a trifle, are never,
And the look in our eyes; ah, can eyes so dis A Visit to Mr. Henry Labouchere-Pen Papers of London-The Marvelous Success of "Truth."

Mr. Henry Labouchere is one of the most interesting characters of our time. A scion of good family and independent means, he started out on a diplomatic career, and very early in life got behind the scenes and learned how the nations of the earth are misgoverned. Then he went here, there and thither until he brought up in Paris, where he vol-untarily remained through the famous siege of that city, during which time he contrib-uted to The Daily News those famous letters setting forth the experiences of the "Besieged"

It is understood that Mr. Labouehere holds a controlling interest in this paper, which is the leading Liberal organ, but of course he is more widely known as the man who made Truth, that famous periodical which initiated personal journalism and put the great "I" in place of the editorial "we." Mr. Labouchere is in parliament for Northampton, having for his colleague Bradlaugh, the atheist. Mr. Labouchere has given and taken plenty of hard hitting in his time. He is radical in the extreme, and yet for all he is one of the Prince of Wales' set, that coterie of good fel-lows who serve to amuse the fat man who possibly may succeed to the present queen and empress who has just held her jubilee.

Mr. Labouchere's country house is built on the site of Pope's villa, at Twickenham, and At the the site of Pope's villa, at I wickelliam, and the site of Pope's villa, at I wickelliam, and the grounds front on the silver Thames for some 300 feet. There are terraces, rookeries some 300 feet. Price $2.50 per cord. Leave orders at stores of A. S. Westlake and Steele & Lobdell, or at my office.

ANECDOTES OF THE WAR. Two Confederates Who Had No Interest in the Struggle-A Frightened Skulker. Maj. J. H. Skelton related in our hearing the following diverting incidents of the san-guinary battle of Sharpsburg or Antietam:

Gen. Barksdale drew his brigade up in line and addressed them in substance as follows: "Men, upon this battle hangs in all probability the destiny of the Confederacy, the destiny of our beloved homes, the destiny of our property, the destiny of our fathers, of our mothers, of our wives, of our sweethearts, Then, let every man of us be a hero in the strife, and acquit ourselves like men. If there be a man among you that possesses none of these precious things that I have just enumerated and feels that he has nothing to battle for, if he will step to the front I will give him permission to retire to ignominious

At this juncture two lean, lank, dirt eating looking shadows of men stepped to the front, and one of them in nasal tones drawled

"Gen'rul, me'n him," pointing to his com-rade, "hain't got no home, no pappy, no mammy, no wife, no sweetheart, an' nary nigger, kin we go?' The general looked at them with withering scorn for a few seconds, and then, pointing to the words in the second of the control of the control to the woods in the rear, thundered: "Git!" While the battle was at its height, and the cannons' thunder fairly made the groun quake, and the shells and grapeshot shricker through the murky air like veritable de-mons, Gen. "Ranse" Wright saw a fellow running out of the fight like a seared rabbit.

The general drew his pistol, and, putting spurs to his horse, intercepted the recrean soldier and shouted to him: "Go back to your place, sir: go back or I'll

The frightened skulker yelled back: "Shoot and be hanged to you; them fellers hev got a thunderin' sight bigger guns than you hev!" and, darring under the general's horse's oelly, incontinently took to his heels.

The company grouned, while some of them cried: "Kill him on the spot!" McCracken had his arm disabled by a harpshooter's bullet in the trenches around Petersburg, but, refusing a discharge, was among the few ragged rebs that grounded their arms when the sun of the Confederacy went down behind the hills of Appomattox.

Grief Too Great for Utterance.

Professor Clayton tells of a thrilling experience. At Ruby City, while looking over a claim to determine the most favorable black on extension of a valuable mine, he accidentally, in marking the ground, dug up some good ore and exposed the ledge. The locators, who had recently sold it for an insignificant sum, were with him. One of them indulged in a great deal of profamity, cursing his luck for having trifled away a fortune. Turning to his parkner, who was less demonstrative, he inquired: "Why don't you kick?" "Don't talk to me, I'm hurt so bad I can't kick. I'm bleeding inside." -Wardner (Idaho) News.

> "Every hatter has two or three dozen styles, and they change constantly, so that we always have to produce something new. Only a few hatters are satisfied with trademarks. Most of them ask for attractive pictures that will help sell the hats. You would be astonished to know the number of English and even French designs that I get up to put in American hats,"

English and even French designs that I get up to put in American hats."

"But aren't the hats imported?"

"Certainly not. There is a heavy duty on hats. The London hats are made in Newark, and I make the trademarks, rampant lions and all, right here. They don't take in the west, however. We get up steel engravings on all sorts of subjects to go out there. The cowboys want actresses' pictures and loud subjects to go in the crowns of their soon brevos, and illuminated gold serpents on the bands outside. We make hierophyphics for the Chinese of California and cotton seenes for the darkies down south. There is always a demand for timely designs, and our albums are a history of the day. Every prominent want, every new actress and every important event goes into hat linings. When there is nothing new to depict our artists use their imagination. As an instance of this, here is a prophetic design. It was executed twenty years ago, and it illustrates a brakeman dragging a man upon the platform of a train in motion. It is leftered traville transit to the complex of the complex of

The Dismal Swamp of Virginia. A correspondent has recently stated that the Dismal Swamp of Virginia was no longer dismal, cranberry patches and clover fields taking the place of the once muddy ground, and the merry whistle of the farmer's boy as he wades have down in the larger. he wades knee deep in the hay. Your correspondent is greatly mistaken, and I am sure he would not like to be following that farmer's boy through the swamp. If he did attempt to pass through any portion of it he would probably be equipped with a pair of rubber boots reaching to his waist and a full stock of pet names to throw at the snags that he would run against and the vines that would trip him, and not with that merry whistle. Dodging green, slimy pools that would let him down in mother earth deeper and quicker than quicksand, making about half a mile an hour, not including the stops sums, and then he is very particular to keep on the edges. Parties are often made up to hunt the bears, of which the swamp is full, and they sometimes push into the heart of Are the best in the market.
