MARQUETTE, MICH. NOVEMBER 12

Entered as second-class of the second class in the post-office at Marquette, Mich.

Speaking of his management of the Democratic side of the congressional campaign in this district, Griffey's paper is good enough to compliment Dr. Desjardins, chairman of the congressional committee. "He done well," that sheet concedes. Griffey was about as decent in the campaign as he is grammatical in his comments on it. He and his organ no doubt "done well" out of the contest in a way that those who know Griffey and his methods will have no trouble in guessing.

Alger county is the only one in the upper peninsula where the Democrats made a gain in the late election, and Tim Nester claims credit for that. But the fallacy of Tim's claim appears from the fact that Fisher ran fully as well in that county as in any other part of the state, with the exception of in Bay. The change in Alger county was mainly brought about by the work of Mr. E. D. Cox, who had some ancient grudges to pay off, and did it thoroughly. He worked for the whole Democratic ticket and pulled all of it through save the candidate for county treasurer. Alger went back this year on the man in whose honor it was named about as badly as did Dickinson, which rolled up an unprecedented large Republican majority, though it was christened in honor of the leading Democrat of Michigan.

One shipment from the Mesaba range mines to date of November 1 aggregated 1,340,000 tons, and from those of the Vermilion range 1,300,000 tons. It is estimated that the total shipments from the mines of the two Minnesota ranges for the season will reach 2,700,000 tons, or very nearly what the entire output of the Lake Superior iron region was in the boom year of 1892, when with an output of less than 3,000,000 tons we glutted the market so that two years were required for its recovery from the over-production of that year. It took the mines of the Marquette range from the time they first began placing ore with eastern furnaces until 1890 to reach a stage of development—taking production as the measure of development—which the mines of the Mesaba range have attained within two years after they were opened up. The fact is significant as showing how readily the new district has been provided with facilities for operating its mines and getting their product to market, compared with the older ranges, and serves to explain why there has been such a steady and remarkable drop in the price of iron ore within the past eight or ten years.

WE TAKE is from the Grand Rapids Press, an Independent paper:

The Press is pleased to note that two such eminent Republicans as Andrew Carnegie and Whitelaw Reid fully endorse its position on the tariff. Mr. Carnegie is back from England for an inspection of his business interests in Pennsylvania, and fully expresses the opinion that the new tariff bill is entirely satisfactory to the iron industries, and that what is chiefly needed now is silence on the tariff issue and a good deal of it from both parties. Whitelaw Reid is now on his way to Europe to preserve if he can the remnant of his shattered health. It is not likely that he will be able to ever again take any part in a political campaign. Before leaving the country he stated for publication that, in his opinion, the McKinley tariff is a dead issue, and that the next campaign will be fought on the money question. The present tariff is not, it is to be presumed, a perfect measure, but it affords a revenue and at the same time gives labor a measure of protection. It is a moderate measure, neither radically free trade nor extremely protection. Hereafter all tariff legislation should be diverted toward details and toward a general revision.

People generally will agree with the two distinguished Republicans quoted in the opinion that the tariff issue ought to be given a rest in order to give the country a chance to recover from the damage that incessant tariff agitation has wrought, but the politicians will have a word to say on that matter. Leading Democrats are already announcing that their party will stick to free trade as a cardinal principle, while Republicans of high standing in the party give it out cold that the vote cast last week was a vote of condemnation of the Democracy for having tampered with the McKinley tariff and that it is the duty of the Republicans to restore the McKinley law as soon as they find themselves in a position to do this. The only way to take the tariff issue out of politics and ensure the country stable industrial conditions is to provide for a tariff commission which will recommend to congress from time to time changes in the tariff schedule as they are found advisable after due investigation by the commission. While the arrangement of tariff schedules is left to congressmen who know nothing about business we will continue to have tariff agitation and the disturbance of business that frequent changes in the tariff laws inevitably produce.

DONOVAN AND THE WHITE HORSE.

Saturday's Detroit News has an interesting sketch of Donovan, the only Democrat elected to a seat in the Michigan legislature this year, from which it appears that he is a shrewd, industrious and well-to-do contractor and builder of Bay City, and not without the humor to appreciate the unique position he will hold as the only representative of his party in the legislature of the state during the coming session. This extract from the News article, covering an interview between Donovan and Fisher, is given as showing the character and relations of the two men:

Mr. Donovan called on the late Democratic gubernatorial candidate yesterday with the News correspondent. Mr. Fisher knows the Democratic Minority well enough to call him John.

"I say, John," he said, tilting his chair back and putting his feet on his desk, "you want to take Roxie to Lansing with you. Roxie is my white horse. Take Roxie, and if you can find a red-headed girl at Lansing you'll be a winner. I didn't see any red-headed girls during my campaign. Guess that's why Roxie was my Jonah," and Mr. Fisher laughed heartily.

"I don't know yet just how I will go prepared," replied the Democratic Minority in the same humor. "I hope, though, to profit by the experience of the man who went to Jericho and fell among thieves."

"That's well, but Roxie can be a mascot for you. Say, John, an idea just struck me. You hire a hall at Lansing and let me exhibit you and Roxie. It will give me a chance to get back some of my campaign expense money," and Mr. Fisher laughed heartily again.

"No, I don't think it's practicable," said the Democratic Minority. "Roxie might go it alone, but you see I'll be so busy blocking partisan legislation that I won't have time to appear at the side shows."

The unsuccessful candidate and the Democratic Minority joked on in this style for a few minutes and then the former did most of the talking.

"There isn't money enough in Michigan to buy Roxie now," he said, in his vigorous style. "It isn't a Roxie kind of a horse, by the way. Roxie is a gelding. Republicans thought they would have some fun with me Wednesday night by telephoning if I would loan them Roxie for their parade. I said of course I would. They didn't expect it. Wilkins, who used to be mayor, rode Roxie and he had a time getting by our house. You see, Roxie is headstrong, and I watched him from the window and told my wife I'd give $10 if he'd dump Wilkins in the mud just for a joke. No, sir, Roxie isn't for sale. I had him four years in Washington when I was a congressman, and I think more of him than ever since the campaign. He's thirteen now, and has a few corns, but his conformation is all right yet and anybody in Bay City who wants him to head a procession can have him for the asking. That's the hardest work he will ever do. I'm going to keep him until he dies. It's funny, though, what notions some people have of Roxie. A minister across the river wrote me yesterday asking if he couldn't have Roxie one day in a week to visit the poor. I draw the line at that, for it is too much like work for Roxie."

"Am I discouraged at the result of the election? You bet I'm not. It takes more than a knock-out of that kind to settle me. I'll be in the front rank again in 1896, as if nothing had happened. Say, I suppose Tim Nester has gone home to celebrate. You know where he lives? It's a town in Alger county called Munising. When you go through Alger county and see a mark on a tree near the railroad track, that's Munising. There is no station, no nothing, but the mark on the tree, but Tim's the boss of the town. It's about his size. What does he do there? Doer nothing but fish. Went fishing for Republican votes this year through the upper country with McMillan. Did I speak in Nester's county? No (contemptuously). I went through on a night train. Didn't care to stay over just to see a mark on a tree."

The Democratic legislative Minority reminded Mr. Fisher that even though he is himself the only Democrat, aside from county surveyor, elected in Bay, that the county is still the banner one of the state.

"You bet it is," replied Mr. Fisher. "And say, John, I've got a few Democrats who would like jobs at Lansing this winter, and I'm coming out when the session opens to help you fix them."

The Democratic Minority assured him that the time is still open for applications, as the Democratic slate has not been completed.

Mr. Donovan is a warm, personal friend of Mr. Fisher's. Mr. Fisher gave him the first contract he got when he moved from Flint to Bay City in 1878, and he has built several brick buildings for him in West Bay City since. It is safe to bet that he voted for Fisher. The only two societies Mr. Donovan belongs to are the Ancient Order of Hibernians and the Catholic Mutual Benevolent association. He has been president of the Bay City division of the A. O. H. three terms, and is at present one of the state deputies of the C. M. B. A. He says that even though he is one to 131 he believes that the majority will be generous enough to give consideration to any purely local measures that he may urge.

STALLED THE STREET CARS

The snow storm of Saturday was too much for the street car line. After fighting it all day to keep the line open between the Salvation Army barracks in this city and the gas house switch at Ishpeming, and succeeding fairly well, the struggle was given up and Superintendent Pearce ordered the cars into the barn.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

The steady increase in the use of steel over iron may be realized from a glance at railway statistics.

In a work on the coal reserves of Europe and their exhaustion, Herr R. Naffé makes the following estimates of the available coal remaining in the various coal fields.

The London Times from Calcutta says that during the recent cholera epidemic at Lucknow several soldiers who were inoculated with Dr. Haffkine's virus were attacked, and that the proportion of mortality among them was the same as among ordinary patients.

There is a general impression that the humidity of the air is greater in the woods than in the open fields.

The price of iron ore, which in 1890 was $3 per ton for Lake Bessemer ores delivered at Cleveland, in 1894 was for the same grades $3.75, and Mesaba Bessemer ores, which entered and broke the market in 1893, sold this year at $2.50 per ton.
