LAND WILL NOT BE SOLD.

Keweenaw Association Proves Hancock Township Tax Roll for 1892 Invalid.

COUNTY CLERK FAILED TO FILE NECESSARY PAPERS.

Decision Will Prove Somewhat Burden-some to Those Who Have Already Paid Their Taxes.

[All communications intended for this department should be addressed to Horace J. Stevens, Houghton, Mich. Telephone connection.]

HANCOCK. The tax sale of lands on which the 1892 levy has been unpaid which was to have come off soon will not take place, at least so far as Hancock township is concerned.

The case of the Keweenaw association against the township officers was one of the last tried at the term of circuit court just closed. The case was looked after by J. D. Hancock and M. J. Sherwood of Marquette, representing the taxpayers association, which handled the case for the Keweenaw association. The case brought up some nice legal points, but the arguments of the attorneys for the Keweenaw association were too strong for the defense, and carried the day.

The Keweenaw association is a heavy holder of lands in Hancock township and consequently brought the suit against the township only. As a matter of fact the entire tax roll of the county for 1892 must be invalid, if the taxes of this township are, as all townships of the county are in the same boat as regards certification of the comparison of the original rolls and the delinquent tax lists.

The county will lose by this invalidation of the 1892 levy. Those who have paid their taxes have no recourse, and their taxes for the future will be heavier because they must stand their share of the burden thrown on the county by the loss of all delinquent taxes of 1892.

J. B. Knight of Norway, state commissioner of mineral statistics, who has been spending the past two weeks in copperdom, went home Saturday afternoon and will return today. Mr. Knight will conclude his work here in a week or ten days and expects to have his report, which will combine the years 1893-4, published before January 1.

James McGrath now has his confectionery, cigar and stationery stand in the postoffice lobby in running order.

The firemen expect a big turnout at their annual ball to be given at St. Patrick's Hall next Thursday night, and they will have it for they deserve it.

Mr. and Mrs. John J. Regney of Chicago are visiting in the Regney's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Ryan.

C. A. Laurier of Neganue concluded one of his monthly visits to Houghton county on Saturday and returned home.

C. A. Mayworm, manager of the Armory opera house, has on hand one party to attend the grand opera season at the Lyceum theatre, Duluth. The Marie Taryar Grand Opera company, one of the strongest operatic combinations on the road the present season, will play at the theatre named—which is without exception one of the very handsomest in the northwest—on Dec. 3rd, 4th and 5th. If twenty-five or more persons from the copper county desire to make the trip a special excursion rate of $6 will be made by the passenger department of the D. S. & A. railway—less than one-third of the regular rate. The rate and the attraction combined should ensure a party of at least the number of persons named.

The adage says, "a prophet is not without honor, save in his own country," but every newspaper in Houghton county supports Judge Hubbell. There is no other candidate for the senatorial toga in the state who commands the solid and enthusiastic support of his party at home as does Judge Hubbell, not only that but the Democrats here are nearly as active in his favor as are the Republicans. This condition of affairs in his home county is the best possible argument, next to the services rendered by his county during his congressional career, in Mr. Hubbell's favor.

Fred Cutler, Jr., deputy grand chancellor of the Michigan grand lodge, Knights of Pythias, will be in town this evening and will review the work of the degree team of the special meeting of Columbia lodge No. 144, which will be held this evening. Mr. Cutler's visit has been twice postponed, but he will be welcomed with none the less enthusiasm on that account.

J. A. McCurdy of Duluth is spending a week or two in the copper district. Mr. McCurdy was for many years a resident of Michigan previous to some ten years ago.

General Booth, head of the Salvation Army, will be at Minneapolis from today up to and including Thursday of this week. Special rate tickets with a fare of only $10 for the round trip are on sale at the South Shore depot here good for return until Dec. 2.

and his genial countenance will no more irradiate the precincts of the Douglass House club room until February next.

The Misses Newton of Lake Linden are the guests of Mrs. Joseph Croze.

The Houghton bakery is now comfortably installed in its new quarters in the recently completed Murphy block on Sheldon street.

CALUMET. Through the courtesy of Superintendent Shields of the Mineral Range a special train will bring the Houghton Light Infantry out here to attend the annual ball of the Calumet Light Guards on Thanksgiving eve. Our militia boys were not overly popular with some of the people at Ironwood last summer but here at home there are none to say them nay and all rejoice to do them honor.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Nels Turner of Calumet village was held on Saturday at 9 a. m. from the French Catholic church.

A camp of the Modern Woodmen was organized by Organizer N. Sweet on Friday evening with twenty-three charter members.

A social dance at the Osceola band hall on Saturday night proved a great attraction to the young people.

The suggestion of the Evening News that a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals be organized here is a most excellent one and should be acted on. Here is an opportunity for the young people of the Epworth league and Y. P. S. C. E. to accomplish a good work—one which needs doing very badly.

A fare of $10.50 for the round trip, Calumet, Red Jacket or Osceola to Minneapolis and return, has been made. Excursionists will go via Duluth. Tickets are on sale for balance of today only.

Martha lodge of the Sisters of Herman's Sons held its initiatory celebration on Saturday, when everything passed off nicely, according to program.

STORIES FROM THE SKY.

Historical and Traditional Stories of the Fall of Aerolites. Every country and every age has its historical, semi-historical or traditional stories concerning immense stones falling from the sky; or, more properly, from space.

Levi tells of a whole shower of aerolites which fell on the mountains near Rome in the year 654 B. C. The Arundel Marbles (marble tables giving the events of the Grecian history from 1582 B. C. to 624 B. C. in chronological order) give an account of a great stone which "fell down from heaven" at Aegostami about the year 467 B. C. Pliny, who died in the year 79 A. D., says that in his time the "great air-stone" mentioned in the foregoing was still to be seen on the Hellespont; "and," he quaintly adds, "it is even now of the bigness of a wagon."

Since the opening of the present century there have been several well attested instances of falls of stone from the regions of space. In the year 1803 a perfect shower of litho-missiles fell in the farming country adjacent to L'Aigle, France, upwards of three thousand separate stones falling upon a wedge-shaped section of country eight miles long by about four miles wide.

Aerolites, or "meteorites," as they are sometimes called, usually fall singly, sometimes in pairs, and, less frequently, in showers, as was the case at New Concordia, O., in 1820, when nearly two hundred red-hot stones fell in a field in broad daylight.

Up to January 1, 1894, there had been between three hundred and three hundred and fifty recorded instances of stones falling from the unknown regions outside of our atmosphere, and in eight of these the fall was in the shape of "showers," the individual missiles numbering from ten to five thousand, and of all sizes, from that of an orange to immense blocks of strange combinations of minerals weighing hundreds of tons.

Keeping Composed. To maintain one's composure under circumstances of a trying nature is about as difficult a task as has ever been set for mankind. The Frenchman is so rarely able to keep cool that he marvels at the Englishman's stolid indifference to most of the ills of life, and in a French work published some years ago a certain "Mildred Hamilton" is held up as the prince of the composed, "for," says the writer, "Mildred Hamilton, having killed a hotel waiter in a brawl, being informed of the man's death by the landlord, composedly orders his host to charge it in the bill."

Strange Properties of Cryostase. A German chemist is reported to have discovered a new substance which has the remarkable and unique property of solidifying when heated and remaining liquid at temperatures below zero. It has been named "cryostase," and is obtained by mixing together equal parts of phenol, camphor and saponine, and adding a somewhat smaller proportion of essence of turpentine. Certain substances, like the albumens, harden on heating, but this is the only product that again liquefies on cooling.

TWO LIVES SAVED. Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City, Ill., was told by her doctors she had Consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thos. Eggers, 156 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching Consumption, tried without result everything else, then bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in Coughs and Colds. Free trial bottles at Farnham's Drug Store. A VICTORY FOR PASKOLA.

It Receives the Official Endorsement of Eminent Experts and a Jury of Representative Citizens.

The suit brought by Ohio's food commissioner against a Cincinnati druggist for selling Paskola on the ground that it was nothing but glucose resulted in a great victory for Paskola and a verdict against the state.

During the course of the trial Professor Shaller of the University of Cincinnati testified that Paskola was not glucose, and even if it was it would be harmless. He also bore witness to its activity as a digestive agent.

Professor William Dickore of the Miami college testified to the same facts. So did Professor Schmidt, the chemist of the board of health, Professor William Hoffman and others.

A practical test was made in court showing the digestive action of Paskola on eggs and meats of various kinds, whereas glucose under precisely the same conditions produced no effect whatever.

This test but confirmed the experts' statements and proved Paskola to be of great value in indigestion and wasting diseases.

This verdict disposes of the malicious attack that has been made against Paskola by interested rivals and suits have now been brought against the proprietors of a well-known emulsion of cod liver oil for having given wide circulation to a false formula and other misrepresentations regarding it.

The animus of this attack will be the better understood when it is stated that Paskola is being largely used in the place of cod liver oil.

AFRICAN CUSTOMS.

Episodes Which a Traveler Saw in the Yoruba Country.

Jean Hess, a French-African traveler, gives in Le Figaro of recent date an unaccustomed view of the savage negro. He pictures her as having a beauty of her own befitting the climate and vegetation of tropical Africa. That, however, might be a matter of taste, and, perhaps, most writers would find it hard to discover, with M. Hess, in the naked negress a "living bronze, of unimpeachable lines," a creature whose pride and dignity suggest "what ancient poets tell of Athenian priestesses and Roman empresses."

Matter of fact and not of taste, however, is to be found in the account M. Hess gives of love and marriage among some of the savage African tribes. In the country of the Yoruba, extending from the Gulf of Benin to the Niger, M. Hess saw a young negro who, after sacrificing a pigeon upon the end of a stream, threw its plumage upon the water, and chanted a prayer to Imoya, protector of the bottom of the sea.

Imoya is a white genius that lives at the bottom of the stream. He has power to inspire virgins with love of the young men that implore his aid. Prayer is made to Imoya in secret place, with the sacrifice of honey cakes and white doves. Here is a love chant that is sung to Imoya:

"There is in the house of the chief a beautiful virgin. Rare by name, the loveliest of all. She has large hips as those of a heifer; she has arms as strong as a warrior's; she has eyes as sweet as the antelope's; her voice is a chant gayer than those of the birds; her dancing is light and a pleasure to see; she is supple and undulous as the sacred serpent; she is lovelier than may be told. I would like her well for a wife. She would honor me in my house and she would give me beautiful children. But she is proud and mocking. She will laugh at me when I would buy her, and I shall not be able to conduct her to my house. Imoya, give her to me!"

The girls also have their chants, fetiches and ceremonies to obtain husbands. In a village of Yoruba, M. Hess saw a group of young negroes performing these rites about a great baobab tree. They carried jars of oil, and sang, moving slowly, with naked bosoms, with measured cadence and harmonious balancing. As they danced they affixed white bits of cloth to the tree. The observer saw nothing grotesque or laughable in the scene.

M. Hess says that the savage negress has her cosmetics, and asserts that she submits to painful tattooing that she may seem more beautiful to men. The marriage of a rich man to the Egbas to the daughter of a chief was a notable ceremony. The maiden's consent having been obtained, the future husband paid her father the agreed price. As the newly married couple journeyed homeward people along the way laid down branches and flowers, saying: "The geni give thee a beautiful spouse; forget not that she is more precious than all thy riches. The virgin whom thou takest was the charm of the house, the charm of the city. Thou desired her. When thou hast given us all thy treasures thou shalt not have paid enough."

Short-Lived Insects. The brevity of insect life is illustrated in the case of those insects that molest and ruin the mushroom. The latter, whose life is measured by hours, is often ruined by an insect who deposits eggs that hatch out grubs while the mushroom is still apparently in the full vigor of youth. Before the mushroom has reached the tottering age of forty-eight hours the grubs may develop into the full-blown insects.

DONATIONS FOR ARMENIA.

Effort Being Made to Raise a Fund to Assist Down-Trodden Armenia.

THANKSGIVING DAY DONATIONS ARE REQUESTED.

Fund Will Be Devoted to Protection of Armenians and Establishment of Better Government.

DEVOTED TO A GOOD CAUSE.

MINNEAPOLIS, Nov. 25.—Herant M. Kiortchjian, who figured prominently in the parliament of religions at the World's Fair and who has since been engaged in interesting the people of the United States in the condition of the people of Armenia, his native land, is redoubling his efforts since the reports of the recent massacres by Turks reached this country. He has just organized a philanthropic association of the northwest, similar associations having been formed in Boston, Philadelphia and New York. As secretary of the association he has written a letter to President Cleveland to urge the mediation of the United States for the establishment of a new regime in Armenia.

With a view to interesting the people of the United States in Armenia and for the assistance of the suffering and helpless people of that country he has issued a "Thanksgiving Appeal." The appeal is to the people of the United States from afflicted Armenians and recounts at great length the sufferings of the Christians in Armenia, describing the slaughter and outrage of the women and children of that land and asks all Americans to cast a vote on Thanksgiving Day expressive of their condemnation of the murderers of these unhappy people. The secretary requests that the vote be in any sum from one cent to a dime according to the ability of the givers and asks that the amount collected be sent to either the Security Bank, Minneapolis, Minn.; the Western National Bank, New York City or to Wells, Fargo & Co., San Francisco. The contributions should be marked "for Armenia" and will be placed in the National Armenian fund.

Bonds will be issued for this fund, which it is the purpose of the organization to redeem at such time as shall be agreed upon hereafter. Pending an organization the following gentlemen will act as trustees of the fund: Mayor, William H. Eastis of Minneapolis, George A. Pillsbury, F. O. Chamberlain, president of the Security Bank. Men of like national repute will be requested to be the temporary trustees in New York. The trustees will hold the fund in trust for the purpose of two definite objects only, viz: 1. To secure protection for the Armenian people in Turkey from further outrage. 2. To promote the cause of establishing a righteous government in Armenia.

The paper concludes by requesting the press of the country to give publicity to this effort on behalf of Armenia and thanks the press associations and press of America for the expressions of sympathy already given.

The Armenians of this city today held a mass meeting for the purpose of expressing their opinion regarding the Armenian massacres. The speakers were emphatic in denouncing the Turkish government. Resolutions were adopted appealing to the American people for their moral support to put an end to the unbearable condition of affairs in Turkey and to use their influence with European governments to secure an immediate solution of the Armenian question.

UPRISING AGAINST TURKS

Armenians in the District of the Masacres Revolt.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 25.—A rising against Turkish rule is reported from Van, Armenia, in which district the recent massacres occurred. The outbreak is said to be due to the failure of the Porte to convene the Armenian national assembly to elect a new patriarch to succeed Mgr. Achikiam, who resigned in consequence of a dispute with the Turkish government. The patriarch Locum Tenes also resigned.

Charles Hart Admits Killing Two Little School Children

TOLEDO, Nov. 25.—A special to the Blade says Charles Hart, who with his brother-in-law, Clarence Brindle, are held for the murder of the children, Elsie and Ashby Good, at Paulding, O., confessed yesterday. He avowed the little girl and murdered both. The confession was made yesterday morning in the presence of Sheriff Staley and two detectives. After the confession the sheriff went to the spot indicated by Hart and dug up the knife with which the deed was done. The details of the confession will not be made public until the trial.

VOTE IS INCREASING

Populist Party Makes Great Gains in Last Two Years

NEW YORK, Nov. 25.—The World tomorrow will print a list showing the number of votes cast by the Populist party in all the states at the last general election as compared with the votes cast by the same party in 1892. The World gives the following: "In 1892 the Populist party polled altogether 1,041,028 votes for president. Between 1892 and 1894 there are no general election returns which can be compared with the year preceding. This year the Populist vote was 1,636,000, a gain of nearly 600,000 votes in two years."

MYSTERIOUSLY DISAPPEARED.

Sensation Caused by Disappearance of Iowa College President

OWELVIN, Ia., Nov. 25.—The sudden departure from Oelwein last Thursday night of Hon. Walt H. Butler, ex-congressman and president and business manager of the Oelwein Normal school has caused a sensation in northeastern Iowa. He was upon the college grounds as usual all day Thursday until 3:30 p.

m., when he complained of being ill and left the college. He went direct to the depot, where he purchased a ticket for Fairbank, a small station east. The conductor of the train, when questioned, stated that a man answering Butler's description had gone to Waterloo Thursday evening. Inquiries have been sent from here to his family at West Union, Ia., but they know nothing of his whereabouts and expected him home Sunday. His wife and child are anxiously waiting the news of his whereabouts. Many rumors are current and fears for his safety are entertained by his friends.

FAILED TO GET THE MONEY.

Bank Robbers Scared Away from Half-Completed Job

TOPEKA, Kas., Nov. 25.—An attempt was made to rob the state bank at Nortonville early yesterday morning. The door of the vault was battered and the outer rim of the safe door was blown off but the robbers were evidently frightened away as they did not complete the job and secured nothing. Nothing was known of it until this morning and there is no clue. A horse and buggy that was taken during the night was found near Atchison this morning and it is supposed the robbers used it in making their escape.

BIDS FOR BONDS OPENED.

Many Prominent Bankers Gather at Washington to See the Bids Opened.

SYNDICATE OF BANKERS MAY GET ENTIRE ISSUE

Entire Amount of the Bids Made is Something Over One Hundred and Fifty Million.

FINANCIERS ARE INTERESTED

WASHINGTON, Nov. 25.—In conformity with his circular dated November 13, 1894, the secretary of the treasury yesterday opened the bids which had been submitted for a new bond issue of $30,000,000 United States 5 per cent. bonds to bear date of November 1, 1894, and redeemable in coin at the pleasure of the government after ten years from the date of issue. This action of the secretary is taken under the authority contained in the act of congress approved January 14, 1895, entitled "an act to provide for the resumption of specie payments." The issue of bonds is made for the stated purpose of replenishing the gold reserve, which by withdrawals for exportation or other purposes has now been reduced to less than $5,000,000. Nearly all of the recent withdrawals, however, amounting to about $5,000,000, have been made presumably for the purpose of purchasing bonds of the pending issue.

Under the terms of the secretary's circular of Nov. 13, bidders whose proposals are accepted will be required to pay 20 per cent. in gold coin, or gold certificates, upon the amounts of their bids as soon as they receive notice of the acceptance of such bids and to pay in like coin or certificates an additional 20 per cent. at the expiration of each ten days thereafter until the whole is paid; but they may, at their option, pay the entire amount of their bids when notified of acceptance, or at any time when an installment is payable. The first payment, however, of not less than 20 per cent. must be made when the bidder receives notice of the acceptance of his proposal.

The denominations of bonds will be $50 and upwards and will be dated February 1, 1894, in order to make the proposed issue uniform as to date with the existing issue; but interest thereon will begin November 1, 1894, and bidders will be required to pay accrued interest at the rate of 5 per cent. on the face value of their bonds from Nov. 1 to the date of payment.

The main bid for bonds was by a syndicate of bankers of New York, London, Philadelphia and Boston, and was for $50,000,000 at 116.888. The bidders included the Drexel, Morgan company, United States Trust company of New York and the large New York banks.

A second syndicate bid by the same parties was submitted for the full $30,000,000, all or none, at 117.077, being a shade below 1 per cent.

Secretary Carlisle shortly after noon held a conference with treasury officials for the purpose of deciding whether the bond proposals should be opened in public or private. At 12:45 o'clock a large delegation of bankers and representatives of the press assembled in Assistant Secretary Curtis' office to hear the bids announced. In the corridor outside was a large gathering of correspondents who could not, owing to the limited capacity of the room, be admitted. Among the bidders present were J. Pierpont Morgan of Drexel, Morgan & Co., bankers, New York; Robert Bacon of E. Rollins Morse & Co., bankers, Boston; Albert Steinhilber, broker, New York; F. W. Keimick, with Kidder, Peabody & Co., bankers, Boston; Pliny Fisk of Harvey Fisk & Co., bankers, New York.

It was decided to admit representatives of press associations to the opening of the proposals. The total amount of the bond bids, according to revised treasury figures, is $134,370,000. The syndicate bid of the United States Trust company, Drexel, Morgan & Co. and others to take the whole issue or none at 117.077 is exceeded by only about $10,000,000 of other bid. No award has been made, but in view of the offers received it is regarded as not unlikely that the syndicate may get the whole issue.

KILLED AT THE CHURCH DOOR

Desperate Murderer Resists Two Officers and Is Killed

MEMPHIS, Nov. 25.—At Enon, near Carrollton, Miss., Marshal Chatman and Deputy Sheriff Brewer had a desperate fight today with a murderer named Claude Moss. Moss, who has been wanted for over a year, was standing in front of a church when the officers grabbed him. He resisted desperately and revolvers were drawn. Chatman finally fired himself from Moss' grasp and fired six bullets into him, killing him instantly. Both officers were seriously wounded. Intense excitement prevailed at the church and scores of women fainted.

Reward Offered for Bill Cook

SOUTH McALISTER, I. T., Nov. 25.—The citizens of Muskogee have offered a reward of $1,500 for the arrest of Bill Cook and his gang of outlaws.

Both Ways Across the United States.

The greatest length of the United States from east to west is on the parallel of 45 degrees north latitude, that is to say, from Eastport, Me., on the Atlantic coast, to a point on the Pacific exactly 52 1/2 miles due west of Salem, Ore. On the above parallel it is exactly 2,768 miles long. Its greatest width from north to south is on the 97th degree of longitude, which extends through the United States in an almost direct line from Pembina, N. D., to Point Isabel, Tex. The greatest width is 1,611 1/2 miles.

THAT BRUTE SIMMONS.

Why He So Basely Deserted His Economical Wife.

Simmons' infamous behavior towards his wife is still matter for profound wonderment among the neighbors. The other women had all along regarded him as a model husband, and certainly Mrs. Simmons was a most conscientious wife. She toiled and slaved for that man, as any woman in the whole street would have maintained, far more than any husband had a right to expect. And now this was what she got for it. Perhaps he had suddenly gone mad.

Before she married Simmons, Mrs. Simmons had been the widow Mrs. Ford. Ford had got a berth as donkeyman on a tramp steamer, and that steamer had gone down with all hands off the cape, a judgment, the widow woman feared, for long years of contumacy which had culminated in the wickedness of taking to the sea, and taking to it as a donkeyman—an immeasurable fall for a capable engine-fitter. Twelve years as Mrs. Ford had left her still childless, and childless she remained as Mrs. Simmons.

As for Simmons, he, it was held, was fortunate in that capable wife. He was a moderately good carpenter and joiner, but no man of the world—and he wanted one. Nobody could tell what might not have happened to Tommy Simmons if there had been no Mrs. Simmons to take care of him. He was a meek and quiet man with a boyish face, and sparse limp whiskers. He had no vices (even his pipe went from him after his marriage), and Mrs. Simmons had engrained on him sundry excellent virtues. He went solemnly to chapel every Sunday under a tall hat, and put a penny—one returned to him for the purpose out of his week's wages—in the plate. Then, Mrs. Simmons overseeing, he took off his best clothes, and brushed them with solentide and pines. On Saturday afternoons he cleaned the knives, the forks, the boots, the kettles, and the windows, patiently and conscientiously. On Tuesday evenings he took the clothes to the mangling. And on Saturday nights he attended Mrs. Simmons in her marketing, to carry the packages.

Mrs. Simmons' own virtues were native and numerous. She was a wonderful manager. Every penny of Tommy's thirty-six or thirty-eight shillings a week was bestowed to the greatest advantage, and Tommy never ventured to guess how much of it she saved. Her cleanliness in housewifery was prodigious to behold. She met Simmons at the front door whenever he arrived, and then and there he changed his boots for slippers, balancing himself painfully on alternate feet on the cold flags. This was because she scrubbed the passage and doorstep turnabout with the wife of the downstairs family, and because the stair carpet was her own. She vigilantly supervised her husband all through the process of "cleaning himself" after work, so as to come between her walls and the possibility of random splashes; and if, in spite of her diligence, a spot remained to tell the tale, she was at pains to impress the fact on Simmons' memory, and to set forth at length all the circumstances of his ungrateful selfishness. In the beginning she had always escorted him to the ready-made clothes shop, and had selected and paid for his clothes; for the reason that men are such fools, and shopkeepers do as they like with them. But she presently improved on that. She found a man selling cheap remnants on a street corner, and straightway she conceived the idea of making Simmons' clothes herself. Decision was one of her virtues, and a suit of uproarious check tweeds was begun that afternoon from the pattern furnished by an old one. More, it was finished by Sunday, when Simmons, overcome by astonishment at the feat, was induced in it and pushed off to chapel ere he could recover his senses. The things were not altogether comfortable; he found; the trousers clung tight against his shins, but hung loose behind his heels; and when he sat it was on a wilderness of hard folds and seams. Also his waistcoat-collared tickled his nape, but his coat-collar went straining across from shoulder to shoulder; while the garment itself bagged generously below his waist. Use made a habit of his discomfort, but it never reconciled him to the chaff of his shoptmates; for as Mrs. Simmons elaborated successive suits, each one modeled on the last, the primal accidents of her design developed into principles, and grew even bolder and more hideously pronounced. It was vain for Simmons to hint—as he had said—that he shouldn't like her to overwork herself, tailoring being bad for the eyes; and there was a new tailor's in the Mile End road, very cheap, where—"Ho, yus," she retorted, "you're very considrit, I dessay, sittin' there actin' a livin' lie for your own wife, Thomas Simmons, as though I couldn't see through you like a book. A lot you care about overworkin' me as long as your turn's served throwin' away money like dirt in the street on a lot o' swindlin' tailors, an' me workin' an' slavin' ere to save a'penny; an' this is my return for it. Anyone 'ud think you could pick up money in the 'orseroad; an' I b'lieve I'd be thought better of if I laid in bed all day, like some would—that I do." So that Thomas Simmons avoided the subject, nor even murmured when she resolved to cut his hair.

To his placid fortune endured for years. Then there came a golden summer evening when Mrs. Simmons took herself with a basket to do some small shopping, and Simmons was left at home. He washed and put away the tea things, and then he fell to meditating on a new pair of trousers, finished that day and hanging behind the parlor door. There they hung, in all their decent innocence of shape in the seat, and they were shorter of leg, lower of waist and wilder of pattern than he had ever worn before. And as he looked on them the small devil of Original Sin awoke and clamored in his breast. He was ashamed of it, of course, for well he knew the gratitude he owed his wife for those same trousers, among other blessings. Still, there the small devil was, and the small devil was fertile in base suggestions and could not be kept from hinting at the new crop of workshop gibes that would spring at Tommy's first public appearance in such things. "Pitch 'em in the dust bin" said the small devil, at last; "it's all they're fit for."

Simmons turned away in sheer horror of his wrecked self and for a moment thought of washing the tea things over again by way of discipline. Then he made for the back room, but saw from the landing that the front door was standing open, probably by the fault of the child downstairs. Now, a front door standing open was a thing that Mrs. Simmons would not abide; it looked low. So Simmons went down, that she might not be wroth with him for the thing when she came back, and as he shut the door, he looked forth into the street.

A man was loitering on the pavement and prying curiously about the door. His face was tanned, his hands were deep in the pockets of his unbraided blue trousers, and well back on his head he wore the high-crowned peaked cap, topped with a knob of wool, which is affected by Jack ashore about the docks. He lurched a step nearer to the door, and "Mrs. Ford ain't in, is she?" he said.

Simmons stared at him for a matter of five seconds and then said: "Eh?" "Mrs. Ford as was, then—Simmons now, ain't it?"

He said this with a furtive leer that Simmons neither liked nor understood. "No," said Simmons, "she ain't in now."

"You ain't her 'usband, are ye?" "Yus."

The man took his pipe from his mouth and grinned silently and long. "Blimy," he said, at length, "you look the sort o' bloke she'd like; and with that he grinned again. Then, seeing that Simmons made ready to shut the door, he put a foot on the sill and a hand against the panel. "Don't be in a hurry, matey," he said, "I come 'ere t'ave a little talk with you, man to man—'ye see?" And he frowned fiercely.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report argument all its own way. If this man took his wife back, perhaps he'd have to wear those trousers. "Ah!" Ford pursued, "she ain't no milder. An' my Davy, wot's that?" Simmons began to feel that this was no longer his business. Plainly, Anner was the other man's wife, and he was bound in honor to acknowledge the fact. The small devil put it to him as a matter of duty.

"Well," said Ford, suddenly, "time's short, an' this ain't business. I won't be 'ard on you, matey. I ought, prop'ly, to stand on my rights, but seein' as you're a well-meanin' young man, so to speak, an' all settled an' a-livin' 'ere quiet an' matrimonial, I'll—this with a burst of generosity—"I'll compound the felony an' take me 'ook. Come, I'll name a figure, as man to man, just an' last, no less an' no more—five pound does it!"

Simmons hadn't five pounds—he hadn't even five pence—and he said so. "An' I wouldn't think for to come between a man an' 'is wife," he added, "not on no account. It may be rough on me, but it's a dooty. I'll 'ook it."

"No," said Ford, hastily, clutching Simmons by the arm, "don't do that. I'll make it a bit cheaper. Say three quid—come, that's reasonable, ain't it? Three quid ain't much compensation for me goin' away for ever—where the stormy winds do blow, so to say—an' never as much as seein' me own wife agin for better nor wuss. Between man an' man, now, three quid, an' I'll shunt; that's fair, ain't it?"

"Of course, it's fair," Simmons replied, effusively. "It's more'n fair; it's noble—downright noble, I call it. But I ain't goin' to take a mean advantage o' your good-artedness, Mr. Ford. She's your wife, an' I oughtn't to 's' come between you. I apologise. You stop an' 'ave your proper rights. It's me as ought to shunt, an' I will." And he made a step toward the door.

"Oh, no," quoth Ford, and got between Simmons and the door—"don't do things rash. Look wot a loss it'll be to you with no 'ome to go to, an' nobody to look after ye, an' all that. It'll be dreadful. Say a couple—there, we won't quarrel, jest a single quid, between man an' man, an' I'll stand a pot out of the money. You can't easy raise a quid—the clock 'ud pretty nigh do it. A quid does it, an' I'll—"

There was a loud double knock at the front door. In the East End a double knock is always for the upstairs lodgers.

"Go's that?" asked Bob Ford, apprehensively. "I'll see," said Thomas Simmons in reply; and he made a rush for the staircase.

Bob Ford heard him open the front door. Then he went to the window, and, just below him, he saw the crown of a bonnet. It vanished, and borne to him from within the door there fell upon his ear the sound of a well-remembered female voice.

"Where ye goin' now with no 'at?" asked the voice sharply. "Awright, Anner, there's—there's somebody upstairs to see you," Simmons answered. And, as Bob Ford could see, a man went scuttling down the street in the gathering dusk; and, behold, it was Thomas Simmons!

Ford reached the landing in three strides. His wife was still at the front door, staring after Simmons. He flung into the back room, threw open the window, dropped from the wash-house roof into the back yard, scrambled wildly over the fence, and disappeared into the gloom. He was seen by no living soul; and that is why Simmons' base desertion—and his wife's very eyes, too—is still an astonishment to the neighbors—Arthur Morrison, in Pall Mall Budget.

A Unique Lottery Record.

A Japanese student living in Brooklyn has had some curious news from his home in Nikko. It appears that his cousin has won the first prize in a government lottery, and, by doing, has been sent abroad to travel for ten years, with a handsome allowance, which is to be paid him every three months by one of the most substantial banks in Japan. If he returns to Japan for more than one month in each year he forfeits the allowance, and it is also stipulated that at least half of the time spent abroad must be in the various countries in Europe. The second prize was five years' travel, and the third prize one year's travel, on the same allowance, but the conditions were that all the time must be spent in Europe. This certainly is the most unique lottery on record, and the most commendable.

THE ALABAMA INDIANS.

Remnants of the Tribe Located in the State of Texas.

Engaged in Agriculture and Industrious Workers—Some of the Queer Customs Still in Vogue Among Them.

The remnant of the Alabama tribe, which migrated to the Trinity river region early in the present century, is a branch of the Creek nation, and is intermixed with a few Coshattas and Muscogees. They speak three different languages, all evidently dialects of the Creek, and most of them understand the Mobile tongue, or servite Choctaw, which, like the French of Europe, was the universal language among the tribes and their usual means of communication with the whites.

The remnant of this race, says the Chicago Tribune, now numbers about a hundred. Their crops are principally cultivated for their own use, rather than for sale. Indian corn is the principal, although many of them plant potatoes, and all of them vegetables, and they usually fill their villages with fruit trees. During the season of cultivation they remain closely at home, working industriously, and hunting only at such times as they have leisure from their crops.

But when everything has been gathered and housed, the last crevice of their granaries is closed to exclude light and air as a guard against weevil, then comes the return to Indian life and Indian enjoyment. They break up into hunting parties after the Arab fashion, taking with them their wives and children, their horses and tents, and household utensils. They seek the wild pine forests, away from the settlements, and work their way in the dense canebushes along the rivers which white men rarely if ever penetrate. They soon fill their camps with game, and alone with themselves and nature, ever safe from the intrusion of a superior and conquering race, they enjoy the realization of Indian life as it was before the white man discovered their country. When weary of the chase, or satisfied with its results, they return to their villages their horses laden with dried meat, deerkins to be dressed for the market, and bear's oil in skins for their own use or for sale. These excursions occupy their time until the season comes for repairing their fences and making ready for their crops, when they all return home cheerful and contented to begin the routine for another year.

Like other Indians they have that fatal passion for ardent spirits which seems destined to be their extermination. But it is generally kept within bounds, as they do not drink habitually. A constitutional depression of spirits, to which they are peculiarly subject, or an overflow of social feeling on the reunion with friends returning from their hunting excursions, usually leads to a debauch. One after another is drawn in and the revel sometimes extends over two or three days and nights. When it is over they carefully efface all traces of their dissipation, dress themselves handsomely, return to their usual avocations, and for a long time drink nothing intoxicating.

They have a wild, irregular code of dueling of their own and are always ready to throw away life on a point of honor, and do it with a coolness and indifference which would excite the envy of a white advocate of the code. In fact, they do not seem to feel any instinctive dread of death. They speak of it with as much indifference as of any future event and meet it apparently without fear or reluctance.

When their crops are worked to a point of safety they are willing to help their white friends. At farms where they are kindly treated and where they find it agreeable to stay they work at moderate wages, and during the cotton season give important aid. Cotton picking is their favorite work. Their small hands and lithe and agile forms glide through the cotton without breaking or otherwise injuring it. As they pick by weight and are permitted to choose their own time of work, this leaves them that freedom of action they prize so highly. They pick very neatly and carefully, attend strictly to the instructions of their employers, and in this, as in all their relations with the whites who treat them kindly, are uniformly desirous to please.

Etiquette with them requires the wife to wait on the husband. This rule is not allowed to bear heavily upon the woman, however. What time the husband can spare from his own peculiar duties is spent in sharing and lightening the labors of his wife. And some of them will not permit their wives to work at all.

COURTEOUS BY INTUITION. But He Would Throw Away the Snuff All the Same. A very little incident will sometimes show the natural trend of a person's nature. An old Scotchman visited an office where some young men were congregated, and after concluding the business which took him there, stopped for a social chat. In the midst of this he took out an old-fashioned snuff box, opened it, took a pinch of the mixture and offered the box in turn to each one present.

The surprise of one was reflected in his face as he declined the proffered luxury, says the Detroit Free Press. Another smiled broadly as he said: "Excuse me," but the third took a pinch and held it in his thumb and finger, while the old man replaced his box, showing in every line of his shrewd old face his appreciation of the snuff-taker, and soon after he took his departure.

"What will you do with it?" asked one of the group. "Throw it away," was the reply; "but I was not going to hurt the poor fellow's feelings by refusing to take a pinch. It is like eating salt with an Arab—it makes you his friend thenceforth forever."

"How do you know that?" "I have intuitions," was the quiet answer.

TWO SIDES TO THE QUESTION.

In Fitting Spectacle Bows to the Eyes Both Must Be Considered.

Having selected a pair of frames with a nose piece of the right height and spread to bring the glasses into the proper position, and having had them fitted with glasses made in accordance with the oculist's prescription, the optician now proceeds to fit the completed spectacles to your head, says the New York Sun. You might put them right on and wear them off just as they are.

But no, he reaches over and places the bows over your ears himself. Then he tries the spectacles gently, as they rest upon your nose, taking hold at the outer ends of the frame, where the bows hinge. Not just right. He takes them off again and smooths the bows out between the tips of his fingers and changes their shape a little and tries them again. Better, but not just right yet. He takes them again, and smooths out and bends in a little more. You observe as he hands them to you, as he does this time, that the bows have not only been changed somewhat in shape, but now they vary in sweep and curve. You put them on and find that they fit perfectly and very comfortably. He touches them and finds them right and says so.

"But the bows are not alike," you say. "No," says the optician, "but they are now made to fit. Your ears are not just alike. One of them is a little bigger than the other, and they are not placed exactly alike on the head."

"What?" you say, and he says: "Yes. There are very few of us that are perfect or just alike on both sides."

JUMPED FOR THEIR LIVES.

Narrow Escape from Death of an Engineer and Fireman at Ishpeming.

ENGINE GETS FROM UNDER CONTROL AND IS WRECKED.

Pastor of the Baptist Church Resigns—Given a Pleasant Birthday Surprise.

ENGINE RUNS AWAY.

Saturday afternoon about 3:30 o'clock switch engine No. 118 in the local yard of the Chicago & Northwestern road got away from the engineer, Thomas Harrington, and caused a general smash-up. An empty South Shore box car was being transferred from the Chicago & Northwestern line to the South Shore. The engine came up the main line as far as the switch connecting the siding with the two main lines a little above Third street. As the engineer reversed his lever preparatory to backing down on the side track the throttle flew open, immediately giving the engine a full head of steam. The engine instantly plunged backward, pushing the box car along. The switchman who had thrown the switch at once realized that something was wrong and did not attempt to jump on the engine as it passed him seemingly at the rate of not less than sixty miles an hour. When the fireman, John P. Jones, saw that Harrington had lost control of the engine he promptly went to his assistance and tried to push the throttle back in place. They reversed the lever but even that did not seem to check the speed of the engine.

Not knowing where they would strike Jones jumped, calling to Harrington to jump also. The latter, however, did not leave the engine just then, but made another desperate attempt to shut off the steam. One of the switchmen, who was coming up the track, kept yelling to the engineer to jump for his life as in a few seconds more the locomotive and car would strike three cars of wood standing opposite Braastad's coal and wood shed. At Third street, perhaps two seconds before the cars came together, Harrington jumped through the window of his cab, all his attempts to shut off steam having failed. He had no sooner struck the snow (and he took a frightful tumble, but fortunately escaped unhurt) than the cars crashed together. The car next to the engine came against the tank with such force as to lift it from the tracks and drive it up tight against the boilerhead. The wood cars were struck with such force that they were lifted from the track. The engine then gave out. Had the engineer and fireman remained on the engine they would have been killed instantly, as the tank and boilerhead came together so closely that it was impossible for a man to get his arm in between them. The steam continued to blow off for half an hour or so. Another engine then came along and separated the shattered locomotive from the cars and pulled it to the round house. The tank of the engine was badly twisted and several holes were punched in it. Two of the cars were also badly damaged.

A few seconds before the accident occurred two of Braastad's men were in one of the box cars unloading wood. Had they been there when the crash came they could hardly have escaped death, as the wood was thrown from one end of the car to the other. One of the doors of the car was knocked off and the aisle in which the men were working was filled with wood. Had the engine and cars got on to the South Shore main line there is no telling what might have happened, as there was a train coming up through the yard at the time. The switch, however, connecting the west end of the sidetrack with the main line was set for the latter, which would have prevented the cars from taking the main track. The switch is directly opposite the east end of the depot platform. The cars left the rails about thirty feet east of this, thus saving the platform from destruction.

Railroad men claim that the flying back of the throttle when the lever is being reversed, as in this instance, occurs frequently. Had the engine been on the main line with a clear track ahead the engineer no doubt would have been able to force the throttle back into place without any difficulty. The mishap was in no way the fault of the engineer, who is one of the oldest and best men on the road. Harrington and Jones used good judgment in leaving the engine when they did as remaining on it would have meant death to both.

Resigns His Pastorate.

Rev. J. H. Green, of the Calvary Baptist church, has resigned his pastorate here, to take effect March 1. During Mr. Green's three years' residence in Ishpeming he has accomplished exceedingly good work. When he began laboring here there were only fourteen persons of the Baptist faith in the city. At present Mr. Green has had several flattering calls of late but will not consider any of them for the present. He is seriously thinking of going to Burma and engaging in mission work. He has a chance to go to that country and take charge of a Baptist school. If he goes he must sign a life contract for himself and wife. Mrs. Green also being offered a place in the educational work there, and that condition is what causes his hesitation.

In case Mr. Green accepts this call he will preach for the first three years to the English speaking people of the place, meanwhile acquiring a knowledge of the Burmese tongue, so that he can preach to the natives in their own language. There are 50,000 natives professing the Baptist faith in Burma. About 32,000 of these belong to the district presided over by Dr. Clough, who has been doing missionary work there for the past thirty years. In case

Surprised Him.

The blacksmiths and helpers employed by the Lake Superior Iron company gave their foreman, Mr. P. F. Kelgren, a surprise at his home on South Pine street last Thursday evening, which was the anniversary of his fifty-first birthday. There were twenty-one, including an instrumental sextette, in the party. When they invaded Mr. Kelgren's home they found him engaged in mending an old shoe. When the knock came at the front door Mr. Kelgren didn't take time to drop his tools and the stick of wood he was using as a block, but carried them from the kitchen to the front door. He felt somewhat embarrassed when he opened the door and was greeted by the group of men, as he was not prepared to receive visitors. He soon surmised what was up, however, and threw open the door and invited them in. After explaining their mission Mr. Mathey, in a neat little speech, presented Mr. Kelgren with a handsome silver snuff box, suitably engraved, and a rocking chair. Lunch was served during the evening and a most happy time was had, but Mr. Kelgren could not get over greeting his men at the door with a stick of wood in his hand as though he had gone prepared for burglars.

DOCTORED CHEESE.

It Was Fined Up After the Fashion of Fraudulent Gold Tricks.

The "found spectacle" trick is a pretty old one, but is worked every day of the year, says the New York Herald. I was talking with an egg and butter merchant a short time ago when a tough-looking citizen jumped off of a passing truck and rushed in with a pair of gold spectacles, or what appeared to be, in his hand, and glibly said:

"Gents, here's a pair of spectacles I've picked up—use glasses? What'll you give me for 'em? Can have 'em cheap. I don't use specs, and I'm in an awful hurry—quick!"

"What do you ask for them?" inquired a bystander, looking at the pair. "They look like gold, man."

"Maybe they are," says the man, hastily snatching them away, as if he had suddenly conceived the idea. "Anyhow," says he, "they ought to be worth a dollar and a half—I'll give 'em to you for fifty cents, say."

He passed them to me. I saw at once they were the commonest kind of ordinary glass in a brass frame.

"They are worth just one dollar a dozen," said I.

And the man looked daggers at me, but sneaked out without a word. This is an old trick, played usually in a crowded street.

"That's nothing," said the egg and butter man, laughing, "to the trick played on me some time ago. Two men stopped in front of my store with a light delivery wagon, and one of the men rushed in and called me by name, asked me how business was, and so on."

"I didn't recognize the man, and looking out of the window to get some clew to him from the wagon, just caught a glimpse of the latter being slowly driven up street. Still I supposed it was some fellow I had had business dealings with."

"Look here," says he, "I've got a couple of fine cheeses in my wagon—two more than our list calls for delivery. Now, don't say anything, but you can get them dog cheap."

"I told him I didn't do that kind of business. But he says: 'All right—your neighbors will.' And I knew they would, too, and I says: 'Hold on.' And he came back. 'Bring 'em in,' says I, 'and I'll see.' He brought 'em in."

"They looked all right and weighed all right, and ought to have been worth eight dollars each. I took one and gave him four dollars. Without my asking it, he had thrust in his knife and twisted it around and brought out the center of the cheese, and it was sound and good."

"But the man was in such a hurry, and the more I thought of it the more singular it looked. And I guess my conscience pricked me a little, for I began to think it was the same as buying stolen goods. Still, I wanted a good cheese."

"I sent out for a tester and thrust it through the cheese and brought out—well, the worst stuff you ever saw! It wasn't worth anything! Then I saw that this thing had been plugged and the center filled with good cheese so nicely you couldn't see it unless you were looking for it. It was the regular gold brick game."

A Great Fortune.

The huge fortune of the late Mr. Hugh McCalmont, which for seven years has been accumulating at compound interest, will pass into the sole control of the heir, Mr. Harry Leslie Bundell McCalmont, the well-known owner of Isinglass. The amount is believed to be not much, if at all, less than four million pounds sterling, and the bulk of this enormous sum was accumulated by the testator while a member of the once prominent firm of McCalmont Brothers. Rumor has it that the amount to which Mr. McCalmont will succeed exceeds that at the absolute disposal of any other single person in this country, and this is not improbable. Of course larger amounts are owned by some of the great city magnates, but probably in most cases their wealth is not entirely unfettered; it is either subject to heavy charges, or else is invested in business from which it could not be easily disengaged. The largest amount of personalty recorded in recent years was that of Baron de Stern, which amounted, we believe, to some seven million pounds sterling, acquired largely through Portuguese finance operations.

Probably the youngest tramp on record is a four-year-old girl, who toddled from Astoria, Ore., to Woodside, She had walked for five days, picking up pennies on the way and sleeping in the open air.

If the election went your way rejoice by trying a bottle of our fine imported liquors, and if it didn't go your way try a bottle anyhow. P. H. Donahoe

The Democrats are all right but they do a dose of "cold lead." Some of P. H. Donahoe's fine brandy is what they need to brace them up.

THE LOST CHILD.

She had to take a journey once with all her children—eight. Her brother Tom, the mean old thing, said "send 'em on as freight."

"Do take the vestibule," said Sis, "so that they can't drop through—For if you spill a few of them, whatever would you do?"

But though they joked and though she laughed, she had a heap of fears. And sometimes grew so nervous that she sought refuge in tears.

But when the morning dawned at length, and all the eight were dressed. So spoke and span, and prim and trim, all in their Sunday best.

She made her mind up, then and there, to not go through their names—Say Alfred, Lillian, Benjie, Sue, Luellie, Jack, Maud and James—

But she could not do that, as they stood when they got of the train—'Twould save a deal of thinking and confusion of the brain.

So off they started on their way, arriving there at noon. I'm sure she never thought to reach the place so very soon.

The brakeman and conductor both helped all her little brood. To disembark; then she began to count them as they stood.

And "One, two, three, four, five, six, seven," she said aloud, then stopped—The people all were laughing, so she thought she would have dropped!

Each window held a grinning face—none looked unless he smiled—So, mortified, she stopped before she counted the eighth child.

The engine bell began to ring, the train moved slowly on—She tried to be nervous haste to see if any child were gone.

She knew she'd counted only seven, when they should number eight. So tries again, and gasping, sinks upon a pile of freight.

"I've lost a child," she cries aloud, "my child is on that train. Oh, stop it—telegraph!" A man of calculating says: "Parlor—what's the lot?" "Eight—eight!" she shrieks again aloud.

Forgetting all things save her loss, nor heeding her little smile—"And here are seven," the stranger says—"I say quiet your alarms—The eighth—well, how will this one do you?" She clasps her little Benjie boy and laughs and cries by turns.

Then, seeing all the smiling crowd, her poor face burns and thrills! I'd read about the Irish pig that ran about the pen. So fast they couldn't count him, and—I thought of him just then!

SMUDGING A HAUNT.

An Adventure in the Mountains of Tennessee.

All the boys in Wildcat cove believed implicitly in the existence of ghosts. Why should they not when their elders put such perfect faith in genuine "haunts?"

From generation to generation thrilling tales of ghostly wanderers were handed down as the richest possession of some particular cove or mountain.

A cove in Tennessee is a long, deep valley among the mountains. Wildcat cove, extending away back among the cliffs of the Tennessee mountains, was exactly the place a haunt might be supposed to enjoy.

But until Bud Sims and Coon Tabor's memorable encounter on the ledge above Lost creek, no one had ever met the haunt of Wildcat cove face to face.

It was just the day for a grand hunt, and Bud and Coon determined to make the most of it. Long before the sun had found its way over the top of Walden ridge, while the morning sky was yet chill and gray, the boys were on their way to the head of the cove.

When they reached the banks of Lost creek the eastern sky was a sea of rippling pink, flecked with soft, dim dashes of changing gold and gray, and by the time they struck the ledge, far over the distant ridge beyond, the sun was rising slowly over the dark mountain and the cloud-mists were rolling up from the valleys.

Half way up the cliff the boys stopped for a moment to rest, for the path was unusually rough and steep. The point which they had in mind was two miles further on, in the range, as the woods were cattle feed or "range" in winter, are called.

Although where the cove was wider it was now quite light, down here in the ravine through which the creek rushed, foaming and rough, to its underground prison beyond, it was only a dim twilight as yet. They had climbed quite a distance already, and below them the waters of the creek roared and rushed. Far above on either side rose the ragged ledges of rock which formed the cliff-lined walls of the cove.

Behind the jutting rock where the boys were resting was a narrow passage leading into a deep hole in the cliff. Genuine mountain boys as Bud and Coon both were, they of course were familiar with every inch of ground for miles around. There was nothing alarming to them in this dark hole; they knew it well. It was only a fissure in the rock, such as could be found in all the limestone cliffs among the mountains, and it extended, so far as they knew; only some thirty feet back from the ledge. It was not wide enough for even a boy to squeeze through with any degree of comfort, and at last grew so narrow that even the curious Coon had been able to go no further.

There was such a peculiar note in his voice that Bud turned around with a long, searching look at him. "Air ye aimin' ter hunt fur the critter?" he whispered, almost trembling to think of the profanity of such a thing as disturbing a haunt.

"Ef hit air handy ter so I aim ter." Coon spoke with his usual quiet drawl, but with such deliberate emphasis that the assertion carried conviction to Bud's wondering ears.

"Fur sure, Coon?" Bud was awed at such daring. "Yes, ef—" "Yes—si!"

The boys were on their feet in an instant, faced, with dilated eyes, toward that yawning fissure. Back there, in the darkness, swayed a ghostly, grayish figure.

"Yes—si, yes—si, yes—si!" mocked the haunt. Then its horrible, unearthly voice died away in a low mutter, as the darkness closed upon the fading figure.

Bud felt his hair rising with terror, and his tongue clung to the roof of his mouth. He could not speak. Too terrified to stir he gazed, fascinated, at the spot where the angered haunt had disappeared.

Coon's face was still a trifle pale, and his eyes were darker than usual; but he tried to steady his voice as he spoke: "Hit war the haunt, fur sure, Bud."

"An' hit war a-mockin' ef ye, Coon. I low hit war powerful mad at ye, fur aimin' ter hunt it." Bud's voice trembled; but he was trying to appear indifferent as to whether the ghost was angry enough to attempt to injure them.

"I'm aimin' ter hunt hit," Coon persisted. His hair seemed rising still and his knees felt unsteady, but his resolution did not falter.

Armed at such audacity, his comrade tried in vain to turn him from his purpose. Coon doggedly resisted. Bud finally desisted in sheer despair, and the boys were silent for awhile.

"Let's smudge him out, Bud," Coon said, at last, in a low whisper. Bud turned around in horror at such daring irreverence.

"Smudge out a haunt!" he gasped. "Dye dast, Coon? What'll hit do ter ye, dye reckon?"

"I low we uns mought jest 'speermint on hit, anyways," Coon returned, deliberately. "Ye see, nobody knows jest what a haunt mought take hit inter his head ter do. But we uns could 'speermint, an' mebbe hit mought do some good."

"Hit mought blast the craps," "Well, hit mought, but ag'in hit moughtn't. We uns would know fur sure of hit war that-away then."

"Hit mought kill us dead," Bud ventured, ditheringly. "I'd like mighty well ter jest know fur certing what a haunt would do," persisted Coon. "Granny's allers a-tellin' about er seeing on 'em, an' nary a word about 'em a-doin' nothin', unless hit war skeerin' somebody mighty nigh ter death. An' I ain't skeery," suggestively, "ef hit air anythin' else."

"Naw, an' I ain't, neither. Well, we uns kin do hit, mebbe." Bud sighed; but heroically determined to follow where his friend might lead.

"An' hit would be mighty satisfirin' ter know jest what a haunt war made of, an' jest what he war obligated ter do," Coon again asserted.

In spite of his deliberate manner he was a plucky little fellow, utterly fearless where haunts were not concerned, and of too inquiring a turn of mind to take the world on others' hearsay.

"Ef we uns war killt, hit would happen some time, anyways," Bud decided, philosophically; and Coon, too, was ready for the experiment.

The gray light was giving way to the warmer tints of day, and far down in the valley were now the sights and sounds of everyday life. The boys' courage revived under these influences.

Coon unfolded his plan. The hunt on the mountain was given up at once; more important work was now on hand. The only exit from the cave was on this ledge, and Coon was to guard it while Bud crept around the rock to a narrower part. In former hunting excursions the boys had often "smudged," or smoked out, the coons that had taken refuge in the hole.

Bud was to attend to the smudging, while Coon stood ready with his gun at the entrance to meet the haunt if it should flee from the smoke.

"There ain't a critter nor yet a human ez kin endure the smoke," Coon argued. "Mebbe a haunt kin; but we uns kin find out fur sure this a-way."

It was some time before Bud could get a good fire started at the mouth of the smaller hole; for it was slow work gathering dry leaves and twigs to feed it with, as the climbing was so rough and steep. But at last he had gathered a good-sized pile on the narrow ledge. Taking out a flint arrowhead and a piece of punk from his trousers' pocket, he laid the two together and struck the blade of his jackknife sharply across them till he had obtained the needed sparks.

A moment more, and the leaves began to burn. "Coon, aw-w, Coon!" he called, softly, peering around the jutting rock, holding firmly by one brown hand. Coon was waiting patiently at the mouth of the cave; he started forward as Bud's shaggy head appeared around the corner.

"Air hit there?" he gasped, breathlessly. "Not yit," Bud responded. "That war why I called ye. Hit come over me, if hit warn't a human, hit mought come outen a hole no bigger'n the smudge hole. But I kin git a-holt of hit ef I reckon, I reckon," with grim courage. He crept back to his fire.

The smoke had penetrated the furthest recesses of the fissure, and was now beginning to issue from the opening which Coon was guarding. He coughed now and then, but manfully stood his ground, hoping every minute for the appearance of the ghost. He wanted the matter settled. His gun was leveled at the center of the fissure.

"S-s-s-s-s!" scratch, scratch, and another such unearthly yowl, as had greeted them once before. It came from the larger mouth of the hole. Bud scrambled around the corner just in time to see Coon drop his gun and desperately clutch at something which looked like the grayish ghost they had seen before. Then haunt and boy had rolled over and over, locked in death-like grip, over the ledge and down into the rushing, roaring waters of Lost creek.

The creek was almost a whirlpool here, for not far away it swept in a circling flood down into its grave under the mountain. It was a dangerous place at any time. Coon was in the wildest death-grip now, and could not have freed himself, even had he dared to loose his hold on the creature's throat.

But Bud was no coward. Much as he feared haunts he could be absolutely fearless in ordinary circumstances; and in that moment on the brink of the ledge he had recognized the ghost. The instant the combatants rose to surface, Bud was kneeling on the ledge, with his old gun aimed unerringly. In that instant he fired. Then, dropping swiftly down hand over hand, by the bushes and the trees, he reached the bank and plunged in to rescue the almost exhausted Coon. When Bud had finally drawn him to the shore, Coon was still grasping the dead wildcat. The boy's face was covered with blood, and both face and hands were badly scratched, but there was no serious injury. Bud pulled the dripping hero up on the bank silently, and washed away the blood-stains.

"Hit come mighty nigh killin' ye, Coon," he said at last, valiantly striving to keep the tones of his voice even. The boys had been friends all their lives and loved each other with a love as strong as was David's and Jonathan's of old. But mountain boys say even less of what lies nearest their hearts than boys elsewhere.

Although both hearts on the bank of Lost creek that day were full of the thought that they had faced death together but a moment before, Coon made no answer. In his heart, however, he registered a silent vow that he would never forget how Bud had saved him at the risk of his own life, and Bud was proudly thinking how brave his comrade always was, and mentally determining always to stick by him.

Lost creek rushed on. A buzzard was circling far above the pine trees on the opposite cliff. Coon shivered slightly; if he had gone down in those waters! And that buzzard! He was glad it could never pick his bones. That lame little sister, Mary Ann, down in the cove, would have watched in vain for his coming, but for Bud. He turned the dead wildcat over. It was an unusually large one. The creature had seldom been known to come so far down on the mountain in these later years.

"Ef a haunt air a human dead a-ready, a gun couldn't make hit no deader," Coon argued, reflectively. "But smudgin' an' a gun war all we uns had ter fight with. I low that the only way ter do in this world's jest ter make use er what a body does know, tell he runs up ag'in the thing what he kin use. We uns done the best thing, I low," he concluded, philosophically, "fur we uns."—Jean Halifax, in N. Y. Independent.

Great Marchers. The French soldiers have the tradition of being the best marchers in Europe. The rate of marching laid down in the infantry drill, 1892—that is 120 paces of thirty inches per minute—gives a rate of 3 miles and 720 yards per hour, or, including the five minutes' halt, 3 miles and 220 yards per fifty-five minutes.

YOUNG FOLKS IN CHARGE.

The Epworth League's Thanksgiving Missionary Service Last Evening.

MR. SPENCER'S THIRD DISCOURSE ON SCEPTICISM.

Church Crowded to Hear Him—Two Important Decisions from the United States Courts.

IN AID OF MISSIONS.

The young people of the Epworth league were in charge of the service at the Methodist church last evening. It was the Thanksgiving service which this society holds every year at this time to set forth the needs of home and foreign missions and to raise money for their support. W. G. King, chairman of the league's devotional committee, presided and the pastor occupied a seat in the body of the church. A special service, compiled by Edwin A. Schell, general secretary of the league, was distributed in pamphlet form among the audience.

The service was composed of responsive readings, appropriate music, the mission creed and prayer and appeals from the various mission fields. It was very pretty and impressive and was very well rendered by the young people. Of course the purport of it all was the importance of missionary effort and it is to be regretted that the general effect was somewhat marred in one of the appeals by some animadversions upon another branch of the Christian church. The appeals were from China, Japan, India, Africa, South America and the Frontier and were respectively read by Miss Marie Hicks, Mrs. M. D. Crawford, Miss May Richards, Miss Sarah Shaw, Miss Bessie Stewart and F. M. Loudy. Quite a neat sum was taken at the collection for missionary purposes.

The Epworth league holds its regular meeting this evening and in connection therewith an interesting literary program has been arranged. All young people are invited to attend.

Study of Human Nature.

The Presbyterian church was crowded last night for the third of Rev. D. B. Spencer's sermons on "A Sceptic's Experience," the title of this discourse being "A Sceptic Studying Human Nature." This was the first of the services held under the auspices of the newly organized Young Men's Sunday Evening club. The music was very good and included besides the usual hymns, Lysberg's "Abide With Me," Snells' "Not a Sparrow Falseth" and Harris' "I Heard the Voice of Jesus" rendered by the choir, the latter number being a solo by Miss Gaffney.

Mr. Spencer began his discourse with an illustration showing that these talks on scepticism are from a sceptic's standpoint. No appeal had been made to the Bible and none would be made. The individual whose experience he was following finally came to stand in a position independent of scepticism and Christianity alike. In this position it occurred to him to see how scepticism agreed with human nature. If scepticism is the key to man's nature it ought to fit the lock.

In making this test we must take human nature as it is. Theology sometimes discredits human nature by claiming it is untrustworthy. One school of scientific scepticism discredits human nature also as untrustworthy by claiming that conscience is an abnormal growth that has been inbred by generations of religious training. The independent inquirer ignores both of these and insists that we take man as we find him. We do not say that man's physical system should be made over to suit a medical theory, but that the theory must conform to the facts. So we assume that the instincts and demands of human nature are correct. The religious belief must be made to suit the man and not the man to fit the belief.

Scepticism is not adapted to human nature because it fails to satisfy. Food gives proof of its adaptation to a hungry stomach. But it is characteristic of scepticism that the soul does not rest in it. There is a continual mental restlessness. Scepticism also shows its lack of adaptation to human nature in that it does not give the moral sense a fair recognition. Conscience is as much a part of human nature as the liver is of the body. Most scepticism of the popular sort simply ignores conscience, as a business man often ignores his nervous system and goes on in a course of life until outraged nature takes vengeance.

Scepticism also fails in its adaptation to human nature in that it does violence to the instinct of worship common to all men. The instincts have never yet been caught in a lie. Sceptics are often the victims of the grossest superstitions. One of the saddest and most instructive chapters in history is that showing to what follies the instinct of worship has compelled man to resort when bereft of an intelligent and enabling guidance.

Judge Severens' Decision.

Judge Severens filed Saturday with Deputy Clerk Moore his decision in the case of the Keweenaw association against Patrick J. Hartford and others, in which he holds that the president's proclamation did not fix the character of "mineral" upon the lands in controversy. It will be remembered that in this case the plaintiff asked for injunction to prevent the defendants from cutting timber from the lands and that Mr. Rush Culver, counsel for defendants, contended that owing to the alleged restrictions of the proclamation mentioned in the Keweenaw association, as successor to the Portage Lake Canal company, had no proper title to the lands. Judge Severens decides adversely to this claim and the preliminary injunction to prevent waste, pending the settlement of the entire controversy is ordered to issue. The text of the decision follows: The circuit court of the United States for the western district of Michigan, Northern division—in equity, Keweenaw association, Limited, complainant, vs Patrick J. Hartford, et al., defendants.

In this case a motion on the part of the complainant for a preliminary injunction was made at Marquette in September last and submitted. Leave was given to defendants to procure and furnish to the court a copy of a proclamation by the president upon which the defendants rely as such a designation of the lands in question "as mineral," as to bring them within the exception to the grants of lands by the acts of congress of March 3, 1895, and July 3, 1896, upon which grants complainant relies as the source of its title.

That copy has since been furnished and appears to be of a proclamation of the president dated July 26, 1851, directing the sale of public lands at the land office of Sault Ste. Marie.

In my opinion this proclamation was not intended to fix any character upon the lands therein mentioned and did not have the effect to impress any particular character upon them. Its sole function was to order a sale of the lands mentioned and left their character and quality as predetermined by then existing law.

My strong impression is also that the designation of lands "as mineral" contemplated by the above mentioned acts, was the designation which had been made by the reports of geologists who had been appointed by authority of congress to ascertain their character, which ascertainment had been adopted and acted upon by the land department in the disposition of the public lands.

It must be presumed that what had been done was known to congress, and it seems probable, to say the least, that the preceding action of the geologists and the department in determining the character of the lands in that locality, was the object of the reference in the excepting clause in the granting acts.

Of course, I do not feel concluded by this opinion on a preliminary motion.

I see no reason to dissent with the grounds upon which the court proceeds, in awarding preliminary injunctions, for doing more than to restrain the defendants from cutting timber or committing any other acts of waste pending the trial, the object being to preserve the lands in statu quo.

For that purpose an injunction may issue. The stay order will be revoked. H. F. SEVERENS, Nov. 19, 1894. U. S. Dist. Judge.

Is Your Name on the List?

The active members of the Marquette Athletic club will serve a lunch to its honorary members Thanksgiving afternoon at 3:30 o'clock and make to them a report of the financial standing and on the good and objects of the club. To those who have already so generously but their names on the monthly subscription list the club announces that its collector will call on them today and hopes they will uphold their part of this work, which is helping very much to keep from seventy-five to one hundred young men and boys off the streets at night and gives them a place where they can spend a pleasant evening, get good exercise or take a bath just as they wish, providing they come into the rooms and act as gentlemen. There has been a class started on every Monday, Wednesday and Friday afternoon from 5 to 6 p. m. Young men who can attend at that time should call and make arrangements with the instructor, as none but those in the class are allowed to use the apparatus at that time.

New Trial Ordered.

The decision of the United States circuit court of appeals has just been filed with Clerk Moore reversing the judgment of the Chicago Lumber company against Hewitt and Smith. Hewitt and Smith obtained a judgment against the Chicago Lumber company at the September, 1893, term of the circuit court here amounting to $2,607.79 for failure to deliver to them the full amount of lumber cut from logs they claimed to have delivered to cut into lumber. The judgment is reversed on account of incompetent evidence allowed on the trial to show the quantity of logs delivered and a new trial is ordered. Messrs. Clark and Pearl represented the plaintiffs and Messrs. C. A. Kent and D. H. Ball the lumbering company.
