What Bryan Said in His Address to the Crowd There.

Boston, Sept. 27 .- Candidate Bryan arrived at Lynn this morning. He delivered a brief address and at once took the train for Boston. On the arrival in this city a quick trip was made across crowd in front of the city hall. Throughout his address he devoted himself to a discussion of the financial issue upon lines followed in previous said:

"You cannot find a correct definition of an honest dollar in a speech of any of the advocates of a gold standard who are talking this year. They will tell you that an honest dollar is a dollar which you can melt without its losing anything. Why, bless the ignorant heart of the man who gives that definition; he does not seem to know that the very that the gold dollar and the bullion at any time you want to."

Mr. Bryan argued there can be no material difference between bullion and coinage value, so long as one can be converted into the other at will. He continued:

'Some of our opponents have been make under free coinage in buying silver for twenty cents and having it coined into 100 cents. Now, my friends, if any of you held silver bullion would you sell it to anybody for half price and let the producer make the profit? Of course not. And yet you hear this argument every day by those who seem unable to comprehend even the plainest truths that we present in the money question.'

The speaker maintained that "in this contest we have arrayed against us all the combinations of wealth," and in conclusion, said :

"I want you to understand the importance of this controversy. It is a question whether the people have the right to govern themselves or whether these great corporations and syndicates and trusts own this government, and have the right to use it and plunder everybody else for the enrichment of themselves. In our platform we declare that the government is greater than trusts.

TWO GOOD TURNS. BY WALTER LEON SAWYER.

Mr. Balcom rose early that morning, and he hurried off to the city as soon as he had swallowed breakfast. That was not his way, and Mrs. Balcom wondered; but, being a good wife, she asked no questions. Before she had fully accommodated herself to the novel event, the man-of-all-work gave her another surprise, presenting a telegram which set forth that his sister was ill and needed him. Of course Mrs. Balcom let him go. It did not occur to her that the double departure left her and the children unprotected, and if it had she would have smiled at the idea of danger. She did The people of Japan will soon gaze not know that there was a burglar in town.

Mr. Balcom did know. As he came up from the train the evening before, his neighbor Jones had stopped him to whisper that the Hartshorne house had been entered and judiciously ransacked. The Hartshornes were in Europe. Their caretaker had been sojourning in that other foreign land, a drunkard's paradise; but as soon as he came out of it he discovered the robbery and hastened to ask Jones' advice. "Oh, my!" she repeated, as she came in sight of the blaze, "Ben Ezra will be burned, won't he? What will Mr. Balcom say? What can we do?"

"D'know," was the depressing answer. "I sent Jane to the corner a'ter the firemen; but the land knows how long it'll take to git 'em here."

"Ben Ezra must come out!" Mrs. Balcom asserted; but there was an accent of despair in the words, determined as the sentiment was.

"Can't break that door down! 'n' that air paytent lock on-Mr. Balcom's got the key with him."

Mrs. Balcom stared straight before her like one fascinated into helplessness. The servant's conscience would not let her rest until she had kicked the door and thrown herself against it. It did not even tremble. She mopped her flushed face with her apron, and, shaking her head mournfully, drew back beyond the heat of the flames that were laying bare the rafters.

Ben Ezra must come out!" Mrs. Balcom said again. The horse's agonized whinny had broken the spell that was upon her. Her eyes filled at the sound, and she ran forward aimlessly and glanced desperately about her.

"Man! You man!" she cried, all at once. "Come here and get our horse."

"N' it's a paytent lock!" the cook chimed in, tragically.

"Hey?" The stranger started and stared at them suspiciously. He turned again to scan the hill road. Then he ran up to the door.

"Huh! That thing!" the women heard him say, contemptuously.

The smoke floated lazily off and left he vision unobscured, and the spiteful snap of flame overruled every other noise. The women looked and listened with an intentness that would have been painful had it long endured. From the bag he carried the stranger took a glittering something which he applied to the lock. Instantaneously, almost, the door flew open. Stripping off his blouse, the man passed through, and when he reappeared the horse, safely blinded, uninjured, was with him. Mrs. Balcom fluttered after as he led the trembling brute to a safer place. For once in her life she could not meet the occasion with graceful words.

Mr. Balcom said a moment later. There was a suspicion of tears in his voice, and he blew his nose energetically before he trusted himself to speak 'again. "Thanks to this worthy man- Why, where is he?" Mr. Parker smiled serenely to himself as he bent to lift Ben Ezra's leg; but he said nothting. "Guess he must 'a' been in a hurry," the cook put in; "he went off 'n' left his satchel. I s'pose I better lay it away, hadn't I 'fore these 'ere firemen go to trampin' round?" She offered the stranger's bag to Mr. Mrs. Malcom was not imaginative, Balcom, but Mr. Parker took it from his unresisting hand and coolly pulled it open. Then he drew Mr. Balcom to one side and bade him look in. "For," said he, "you won't often see a neater set o' burglar's tools than that is!"

CURIOUS BALLOON EXPERIMENT Effort Made at Paris to Collect Atmosphere at a High Altitude. An interesting scientific experiment was made the other day in Paris with the aid of a balloon which was sent up from Villette at half-past ten. The object of the experiment, says the Westminster Gazette, was to collect a quantity of atmosphere at a very great altitude for purposes of analysis. The balloon was, therefore, sent up alone with the necessary instruments attached to it. These consisted of an entirely new kind of reservoir, capable of holding tap hermetically sealed, but so arranged with clockwork apparatus that it would open just one hour after the ascent and close again one minute later. A good deal of ingenuity had been displayed in this invention. In order to preserve the reservoir from the intense cold of the upper regions, it was surrounded by a bath of soda-water, which was expected to keep the apparatus at an even temperature. In addition the balloon also carried two baro-thermographs for registration purposes at high altitudes. Attached to the balloon are instructions to those who may find it. so that it may be carefully wrapped up and forwarded to Paris forthwith.

> LION ESCAPES AT GLEN ISLAND. Brute Kills Two Dogs and a Calf Before Being Recaptured.

Jack, the big African liop in the "zoo" at Glen island, New York, made his escape the other night, and it took until the next morning to get him safely lodged in his cage again. During the night the attaches had an exciting lion a very profitable and interesting trip, hunt, and in that time the brute literand, as he spent nearly the whole time ally tore to pieces two dogs and a calf. The park employes were engaged in transferring the lion from one cage to he had ample opportunity to study the another when he escaped. The lion's roar as he broke away from the cage startled the entire animal community of the big "zoo," and for a time pandemonium reigned. Lions roared, tigers growled, bears grunted and monkeys him to leave. He stayed, however, but chattered excitedly. The men scramchattered excitedly. The men scram-bled for trees, which they climbed with influence of one of the three chief men J. H. Poor of Manistee was in the a greater degree of rapidity than ever in the town. before in their lives.

There are 18 of these villages in New Mexico: the one selected by Mr. Miller as being least changed through outside influence was Pueblo Taos. He found the inhabitants quiet, industrious and moral people. They are Christians nominally, but in secret carry on the rites of an unknown religion. They are not satisfied with the marriage or burial ceremony performed by the priest, but go through another, according to their ancient customs. Mr. Miller lived with one of the important families, several members of which spoke English. In spite of the fact that the dogs often slept in the bake-oven and that kitchen utensils were not numerous, the food they provided was quite acceptable. The oldest member of the family was a woman 106 years old, an age which it is not uncommon for the women to attain. Numerous photographs and some very fine pottery were obtained.

Two of the dogs belonging to Glen island, on hearing the uproar, came bounding over the bridge which connects the "zoo" with the other islands. The first one was a Newfoundland. It reached the scene just as the lion made a spring for Keeper Bannister. As the dog appeared the lion sprang for it. Both lion and dog rolled over and over and the dog soon ceased to struggle. A mongrel dog, which had been hanging about the "zoo" for some time, shared the same fate.

The brute was next located in a cow shed, where it had killed a calf six weeks old. It was just inside the door, with two ropes which had been attached to its collar trailing outside. The ropes were quickly made fast to stakes, and not long afterward the lion was en-

A representative of the press learned the other day that despite her long and wearisome experiences of the winter, sailing of the steamer Servia, by which sha and her party were to return home, that she would not leave Europe so long as there remained the slightest chance that her presence would be needed in Turkey. In view of the present troubles Miss Barton has telegraphed intimating her willingness to return to Turkey if she can be of any service to the Armenians, and has received answers stating, upon the highest authority, that there is apparently no immediate danger of further troubles, but that no one knows what may happen from day to day.

Owing to the tenor of the telegrams received, Miss Barton has decided to remain for the present in England, within short call of the field of danger.

The first named pleaded guilty to the additional charge of keeper. They were remanded for sentence. Cornelius Sullivan, an alleged Ishpeming highwayman, pleaded not guilty to the charge of robbery and was remanded for trial.

Wells Dorhan, one of the three men who attempted to overpower the Dennis brothers in a Front street saloon and take their savings from them which they had made working on the new railroad, entered a plea of not guilty when arraigned. Dorhan's case will probably have to be carried over till next term as one of the complaining witnesses has been taken down with typhoid fever. He is now at one of the smaller hotels of the city being attended at county expense. As the man was just taken down last Friday he is tolerably certain not to recover inside of the term.

Wants to Try an Experiment.

A. R. Bennett, who was the chief mover in the project to build a bicycle road to Presque Isle, and to whose energies the wheelmen are chiefly indebted for the path, now has an idea that the section of it running along Presque Isle drive could be improved if made of another material, or rather several of them.

Mr. Bennett wants some of the more enthusiastic cyclers to join with him and try an experiment, the cost of which would be slight. He proposes that they get one load each of charcoal braise, white stone, ashes and gravel dump the lot in a heap out along the line of the path and let it get thorough-ly soaked by a few good rains. When this is done several husky laborers should be secured to spread the com-pound on the path and roll it down nice and smooth.
