He told his man next time to set up that stuff with the prussic acid in it, and then invited Bullinger, as a personal tavor, to join him in a toast. Before the toasting business had been finally and satisfactorily settled, Bullinger was lugging around six drinks of this peculiar liquor whose effects had hitherto always been considered sudden death or a life in the insane asylum. Several of the boys started forward to rush him out of doors, ere he fell dead before their very eyes; but the smile on his countenance was of a peculiarly satisfied and happy nature, and he suggested that perhaps the crowd would favor him by a friendly drink all around at his expense! They couldn't believe it, until he had said hand actually trembled as he pushed the poison across the counter. Every man except Bullinger took a cigar and crept silently out upon the street, and after binding themselves by a terrible oath never to reveal the secret of his death, they slunk home and crawled into bed. How many a little crib or cradle stands idle now, which last Saturday night held the rarest treasure of the heart? A week is a life-a week is a history. It marks events of sorrow and pets, strive to be a better man, and bless God for giving his weary children so dear a stepping stone in the river to the Eternal as Saturday night. C.

WE regret to announce that Mr. Sydney E. Church, formerly Judge of Probate for this county and a man of high legal attainments, has, during the past week, exhibited such unmistakable signs of insanity as to call for an investigation at the hands of the Probate Judge. Mr. Church has for some time exhibited a tendency to softening of the brain, superinduced by the continuous, though, perhaps, not excessive use of stimulents. Only a few years ago he was considered one of the most brilliant legal minds of the district, but his constituency and acquaintances gradually lost confidence in his efforts to abstain from liquor, and although any of the labouers, mechanics or business men of conducting himself at all times as becomes a good | the city. > MORLEY declines our wager in reference to the circulation of the MINING JOURNAL and Home in the cities of Marquette and Ishpeming, but does not hesitate to accuse us of "willful talsehood," Well, we are perfectly willing to spare him the loss of $25, and will make another proposition. He has asserted that he sends ten Homes to Marquette where we send only one MINING JOURNAL to Ishpeming. Now, if he will consent, we propose that the affidavits of Postmasters Ropes and Billings be taken on the subject and published, which will not only show exactly how many papers are taken in each city, but will tell conclusively who utters a "willful falsehood." Or we will submit our list to the inspection of any disinterested gentleman Mr. Morley may be pleased to name, if he will do like. wise, and allow his statement to settle the question of veracity. Will you do either, Mr. Morley?

In this connection we desire to make the Home another offer. We will wager him a new hat, a pair of suspenders, or something else he may need, that the circulation of the MINING JOURNAL in the city and township of Marquette is equal to the entire weekly edition of the Home-or that we send more MINING JOURNALS out of the county than he circulates Homes within its limits -or that our total circulation is three times as large as the total circulation of the Home! Come now, Mr. Morley, don't ereep out under the baby plea. You have made an assertion, and accuse somebody else of falsehood You have a chance to prove your assertion; do it, or else be honest and confess that you yourself have lied. Four aces make a good hand; but a straight flush beats it!

LUMLEY'S PARDNER.

I have forgotten the name he brought with him from the States, for nobody here ever called him anything else but "Lumley's Pardner." We miners have a familiar knack of re-christen ing, and a name once altered sticks to a man as long as he sticks to the mines; so, even after Lumley had thrown up his claim and left the diggings, a good three years ago, Lumley's Pardner still remained, a finger-post to trace the distance back.

After all, John Jones, or Lum'ey's Pardner, what mattered it, in that doubtfut tide of immigration setting in toward the wild regions, where the first confidential question, after intimacy seemed to warrant the liberty, was invariably, "Saay, comrade, what was your name before you came here ?" You see, I knew Lumley's pardner when he first came into the mines. I was up at Wood's Diggings at the time he and a party of two or three more came around prospecting. I remember I thought what a fine, stalwart young fellow he was, straight as a young pine tree, and no foolishness about him, either, for he had been roughing it a year or two down on the Texas border. I never saw the boys more downright pleased over a new-comer than when he bought a claim and went in with us. He was not a man to talk much about himself, nor one you would feel free to question, but there was honest square-dealing looking out of his clear gray eyes, for all the trouble and unrest laid up behind

Lumley was as different as a man could be. I have often noticed that men take to unlikes in mating among themselves, as well as in choosing mates for life. He came into the diggings a week or so later, and they somehow tell in together. Lumley was what you might call an extra clever fellow. He looked scarcely more than a boy-these fair-skinned people never show their age-with his handsome, womanish face, bright blue eyes, and trim-built flgure, but he had confidence until you could not rest, plenty of the gift of gab and a somewhat about him-I believe people call it magnetism; at least, when you were with him you believed just as he did, and then wondered at yourself afterward for Lumley always had a knack of twisting folks around his little finger, for all that the lines of firmness were quite lacking about his mouth. Lum-ley's Pardner, now, with his close-set lips and square massive jaw—you might as well hope to move a mountain as him against his will. He would be strong to do, or to bear; you could easily see that.

I do not know as it was exactly fair! I never meant to eavesdrop, but it happened in this wise one night I went over to Lumney's shanty—it was amazing strange how soon his name got tacked to everything-to see about a pick he wanted mended. I used to do the smithing in those days. As I opened the door I saw there was no one in, and being tired with my day's work, I dropped down on a log just outside, lit my pipe, and sat leaning against the pine boards waiting for Lumley to come back. I guess I must have got drowsy and fallen asleep, for the first thing I heard was voices, and Lumley's Pardner speaking out bitter and short, in a way we seldom heard him speak. "I reckon it's of no use to ask if there's any letters come to my name," he said. "There's no one to write to me.

I rubbed open my eyes and saw two gleams of light streaming out through the open door and the one loop-hole of a window, and then I knew that Lumley and his mate must have passed me by and never seen me in the twilight. Raising myself up, I saw Lumley through the window, sitting down to the pine table beside a tallow dip, with two or three letters lying before him, and one open in his hand. Then it dashed across my mind that one of the boys in the camp beyond had gone in to the station, and was due with the mail that night.

Lumley's Parder sat over the far side of the table with a gloomy look in his eye. Being in the same boat myself, I knew how lonesome it was never to have news from home, and wondered to myself how a manly, fine-looking feilow like him be without wife or sweetheart, waiting with a woman's pride in him somewhere. Lumley was busy reading his letters. I thought | him with a call. I had better stay outside. He was that intent at words, but after a moment he lifted his force with words, but after a moment he lifted his face with one of the proud, bright looks that were Lumley's own. "Ay, comrade!" he cried cheerily; "and don't tell me it isn't all your own fault. Don't dare to envy me my wife and child."

There was no reply; but, looking over, I saw such a bitter, sorrowful look on the face of Lumley's Pardner, that, scarcely knowing what I was doing, I stood and watched and pitied him. I heard Lum-ley read aloud; words of love and trust, watching and waiting, and of happiness in him and the child, I saw his face as he read. He might be a weak man, but he loved the woman and child. From the last letter there dropped out a carte de visite. Lumley caught it up with boyish eagerness.

"Old pard," he cried, you shall see my two treasures. Here they are-Lulie and the boy ! He tossed the picture across the table. The other picked it up. I saw a man die once, stabbed through the heart. Just such a look came into the face of Lumley's rardner, as he glanced at that pic ture in his hand. Lumley, bending over his letter, never saw it. When he had finished reading, he held out his hand. The other did not even raise his eyes, but kept them fixedly on what he held. 'I, too, ouce thought to have a wife and child," he muttered presently, less to Lumley than to him-

The words following that look were a whole book of revelation to me. Happily, Lumley dil not notice. His face showed some surprise, mingled. with that placid satisfaction the successful man ai-

"Ah!" he returned, shaking his head knowingly, "is that the way the land lies? I knew you were always close mouthed, but a disappointment-I never suspected that. She, whoever it was, had precious bad taste when she looked the other way!" and he ran his eye admiringly over the other's spleu-did proportions and handsome manly face. "She never refused me," broke in Lumley's Pardner, in a low smothered tone, his eyes still fastened on the picture. "I-never asked her, but she knew my mind and I thought I knew hers. I was sure she would wait for me until I came back. It was for her I went away."

"But you wrote to her?" questioned Lumley, with genuine interest.

"Not a word-not a line. I am a poor scribe. But she knew me well enough to need no written assurance of my intentions. Every day would be lived for her. There could be no doubt of that in her mind. Lumley made a hasty gesture of dissent. "And there, old man, was precisely where you failed to connect! It don't do, you know, for women to take too much for granted. They like to be well fortified; and then you are the surest to win if you take them by storm. Why, my Lulie-" 'She don't look as though she ever walked over a true heart with her dainty feet, and that glad little smile just curving her lips!" broke in Lumley's Pardner, his white face still bent on the picture. His deep voice trembled over the last words. "Lulie is truth itselt," answered Lumley, quickly.

"She never loved anybody but me. To be sure, she had admirers—how could she help that and be what she is? But she loves me truly. You can see it in her eyes!"

Lumley's Pardner turned deathly pale. He caught the table by one hand as if to steady himself and fairly hurled the picture across to Lumley. It missed its mark and tell to the floor. As he saw it fall, all the fierceness died out of his eyes, and a frightened look crept into them.
"Pick her up," he said, with timid apprehension, as though it were a human being to whom, in a moment of passion, he had committed some act of vio-"I didn't mean to do that-poor little mother!"—the last word seemed to give him a stronger footing with himself. "I was thinking how my wife married another man and never let me know." "Come, come, old man, don't take it so to heart," said Lumley, soothingly. "There'll be a pleasant home, a dear little woman, and bright-eyed children in the future for you yet!"

"Never!"

Lumley's Pardner brought down his fist like a sledge-hammer; then he leaned forward in his seat, with a feverish eagerness in his manner which he tried hard to keep out of his voice :-"Tell me, how you would have given up your Lumley laughed with easy, careless good-nature. "You put me in a tight place," he said. "But, Marquette, will receive prompt attention. CONCLUDED ON SIXTH PAGE.

THE impromptu party at the Barnum last Friday was an enjoyable affair. "GADDING" ore is not very pleasant, at times, as will be seen by the following: John Johnson, in the Cleveland mine, was "gadding" a piece of ore, when the gad flew and struck him just under the left eye and broke the cheek bone, in fact, far as the Chicago & Northwestern railroad track, pinched a hole completely through, and otherwise at the east end of the mine, where it joins the Lake shattered the bone.

This city and Marquette are the only ones in the Upper Peninsula at whose pastoffices one can purchase Canadian money orders. A late treaty with that government enables the postmasters at designated offices to issue money orders on Canada. This will be good news to the Frenchman. Scorers-Charles Doolittle, for Negaunee; J. C. H. Pel-THE Barnum mine-Capt. Wm. Ledgwick-is one of the establishments that greatly helps to promote the interests of our city. It employs about 200 men and will be seen to stand pretty well up in the scale by examining the shipping lists. The new improvements now going on at this mine are, first, the sinking of a shaft at the west end which is already down 150 feet or more in ore. Three drifts from this shaft, east and west on the vein, open up a large quantity of ore which is now being mined. The vein widens as it goes down and has been traced as done here and mining is now comparatively easy-in fact, open quarry work. A shaft is also being sunk here which can be stoped back from and give a face of ore to work on from 20 to 25 feet. A new boiler is being put in to relieve the constant strain of the creek, fell in and was nearly drowned last on the old one. It will be five feet in diameter and eighteen feet long with sixty three-and-a-half inch flues. An addition to the engine house is also being "YAKE" knows the difference between toad stools erected for its reception. A general overhauling and "cat eggs" nearly as well as he knows the in- and repairing of the engine and pumps will shortly take place, when the mine will probably shut down for a month or six weeks. A new well Our assets are fewer than during good times, we is also dug to supply the boilers with water, the water from the mine being found too heavy with mineral and not pure enough for steam purposes, The stock pile of this mine is all shipped and the ore as fast as mined is now put in the cars and is daily ness of Ishpeming nestling among the iron mines, sent to the shipping ports.

THE Erie mine still continues active work with about forty men and is getting out some first class ore.

THE Magnetic mine will shortly resume work, and we understand is looking for a number of good men.

THE Kloman mine closes down this week for good. George Dunn remains on the location to look after the houses and -other proprety of the company.

Mr. C. G. Collins has let the contract of building a wagon road from the silver mill to the shaft of the Ontonagon and Lake Superior company's mine, a distance of one mile, for $100. Lowell to Lancashire.

At the meeting of stockholders of the Ontonagon and Lake Superior (Collins) silver mining company, on Monday evening last, no business was transacted, a majority in interest not being present, and an adjournment for one week was taken.

THE latest reports from the Collins silver mine are to the effect that the workmen engaged in pumping out the shaft have met with from 12 to 14 feet of mud in the bottom, and a test is not looked for by the officers here until Friday or Saturday of next week.

No. 1 STACK of the Deer Lake Iron and Lumber company's furnace, Ishpeming, is again in rupt, mischievous and intolerable blast, and is being run on slab-charcoal nearly altogether. It yields 17 tons of pig metal per day, and is only 8-foot bosh. The product of the furnace is large, when the softness of the coal is taken into consideration.

WHAT does the Home call a suspension of operations? As stated in this paper, operations were suspended at the Washington two weeks ago. That a few men are engaged in shipping the small amount of ore previously mined, does not change the fact in the least. The mine has been shut down as tight as a clam.

THE test of the vein rock of the Superior Silver Mining company was completed on Saturday last, and the result is as encouraging as the most sanguine could have expected. The result from five tons of rock is a brick weighing 224 ounces troy, and at $1 25 per ounce in currency, is worth $280-an average of $56 per ton. If anything more had been needed in order to substantiate the hopes entertained of the Iron river silver veins, it seems to have been furnished in this third test of the rock. No better investment presents itself to those having the necessary means than the establishment, immediately and at once, of a forty ton silver mill near the centre of the various mines now being developed.

THERE is nothing like accuracy. In its issue of July 3d the Home announced that the Kloman mine had suspended operations and discharged all its men. On the 10th, at the request of one of the owners, we corrected the statement which was not true, although the question of suspending operations was then being considered. A week later we announced the fact that the owners had decided to suspend operations, a conclusion which had been reached on the 14th. And now the Home couples the two items together for the purpose of conveying the impression that both statements were to be found in the same issue of our paper. The fact is operations were continued at the Kloman for nearly two weeks after the Home announced that work had been stopped.

T. T. Hurley; Secretary, F. W. Cottle; Directors, T. T. Hurley, Wm. Burt and F. W. Cottle. ten men are employed in stripping and quarrying the slate. The company claim to have met gold, a section of the rock assaying $5 of silver per ton. It is expected that the vein, which is plainly outcropping, will become more valuable as a greater depth is reached. The company have already sunk upon the indication to the depth of thirty feet, and are sanguine of soon striking "pay rock." It would be singular, but not extraordinary, if the company succeed in eventually opening a productive silver mine in the extensively explored region of Huron Bay, but more wonderful things are happening every day.

THE Houghton Gazette elevates its proboscis at the Ontonagon silver discoveries, and says: "Our people have not yet arrived at that stage of excellence-copper suits them well enough." If the editor knows anything--which is rather certain-he knows that the Iron River silver is a foregone conclusion-a demonstrated reality. endeavoring to enlist capital in the developabout plenty of money and good times to the people of this section, and while admitting statistically the most favorable facts, he still sneers coldly at the whole matter. Is it possi-and master-copper-and that in deference to the pleasure of the eastern capitalists who largely control that interest in Houghton county, it is incapable of uttering a kindly word in behalf of other deserving interests of the people of this section outside the circumscribed limits of copperdom? Such would certainly seem to be the case.

THE Iron and Steel Bulletin has the following sensible suggestions upon the subject of protection versus free trade:

England is set before us as a triumphant example of a free-trade nation, and American free trade draws its most effective arguments from the English school. But there has never been a day in her history of a thousand years when, if her statesmen saw even the least of her interests threatened from abroad, they have not resorted to measures essentially protective, and maintained them with a strong hand as long as they were needed. Such was the repeal of the old revenue duty of 5-16d, per pound on all raw cotton imported into England from America. It was observed that the duty had the effect to discourage the cotton manufacturers of England, -just enough to enable American manufacturers to compete with them in English and colonial markets, and she abolished the tax. The immediate effect was to transfer the centre of cotton manufacture for those and other foreign markets from

Said a certain rich Isle of the Sea, I would like the world's work shop to be, Let ME make your cloth, Twili be better for both

And decidedly better for me. She has been quite as ready to levy taxes as to repeat them, in the interest of protection. Her ports have been free just so far as, and no farther than, it would serve the apparent interest of the English nation, judged by the same moral and economical tests which other nations apply to theirs. Whenever a special interest has needed it under the flerce competition of the French sea-kings of the last empire, she had not hesitated to "protect" it by means of bounties and subsides-a most expensive form of protection, now generally discarded by other nations. When her doctrinaries suggested, as they did not fail to do, that the practice was inconsistent with their theory, they were told that free trade was good enough as a principle, but was not good as a hobby; that there was a point at which it ceased to be legitimate, and became cor-

In the present unorganized state of the business of dealing in silver stocks on Lake Superior, it is very difficult to make quotations, as a few small lots in weak hands, which are offered at low prices by those who find themselves obliged to sell at any price they can get, have a tendency to keep prices down below the actual value of the stocks which are changing hands. The following quotations, furnished by Messrs. Mathews and Longyear, dealers, probably show about the state of the market

THE Cleveland Review, after announcing the suspension of the Kloman mine, says: "No reason is given for abandoning the Kloman, 'hitherto regarded as a first-class mine, belonging to the Lucy furnace firm, Pittsburgh -whether the vein narrows, the lode 'peters "out," or whether so much rock has been left standing that it will not pay to remove it for 'the purpose of getting at the ore." The reason for the temporary abandonment of the Kloman is not that the vein is narrowing, the lode petering out, or that so much rock has been left standing that it will not pay to remove it in order to get at the ore. On the contrary, the Kloman vein is naturally so narrow, that with the present moderate demand for ore it will not pay to operate the mine until such time as prices shall advance. It is simply a question of the relative cost of mining ores which, during the present state of affairs, is governing the continuance or closing of operations at the various locations. The Kloman vein, which has lost none of its magnitude or quality, is of such characteristics as to render its operation unprofitable, while other mines are only being maintained on account of the great extent of their operations and the magnitude of their daily production. For example, a person can live comfortably on the interest of $10,000, but upon the usury of $1,000 he An adjourned annual meeting of Hurley's would naturally be obliged to attain other Huron Mountain Slate and mining company revenues or make considerable inroad upon the was held on Wednesday afternoon, August principal. Such is the state of affairs at present, and should no redeeming feature in the trade be noticeable by the opening of another with good indications of silver and traces of season there will be still more of the smaller mines that will discontinue operations-some of whom undoubtedly regret not having done so long since, but have taken their chances on an improved market for ore during the present

WE have now become so fully satisfied as to the prospects of the Iron River silver region that we deem a statement of facts in order for the guidance of those looking toward investments in the various stocks and interests. There are locations already so far developed as to admit of scarcely a doubt as to richness and value, and others, although promising, which need to be carefully investigated before one can make what may be called a reliable investment. The peculiar course adopted by the men who organized most of the companies will be far more detrimental to the development of the mines than would be generally supposed. The And just at this time, when the companies are stock in most cases, has been constituted nonassessable, which is far more preferable to the ment of the mines, whose operation will bring | buyer, but has a tendency to retard mining operations on the part of the company. The parties organizing these companies have depended altogether upon the sale of company stocks to meet current expenses and develop lively paper recently started at Prince Arble that the Gazette acknowledges but one lord their mine. Only the Cleveland, lately orga- thur's Landing, Ontario, has the following in- neighborhood of Duluth. They are not meeting been in such demand in war. The consequence

nized by some of our most prominent men, and having considerable enterprise and promise, admits of assessments being made, and even this company limits the amount to ten assessments of 50 cents each. It is this policy which has allowed large portions of the capital stock of the numerous companies to find its way into hands of various parties, without materially benefiting the organization, and it will be necessary for the stockholders themselves eventually to take some decisive action in order to | ing to reap at once an enormous return for their paid up place the company upon a working basis. There is considerable activity in the silver region and new discoveries of the vein and tests of rock are being made almost every week. All that is necessary in order to set things "abooming" in the silver district is additional capital to take up the remaining stocks so that operations may be commenced upon an enlarged and paying scale. However, before the mines can possibly be worked to advantage (their value being already well known) it is absolutely necessary that one or more large mill, such as was suggested by Mr. Crosby in last week's issue of the MINING JOURNAL, be erected. We feel confident that such a mill will be built during the coming winter, if not by capitalists who may be brought to a favorable consideration of the investment, then by the stockholders of one of the various mines now so deeply interested. We ask the favorable consideration of this region by those desiring to make profitable investments. There is no reason why the silver district of Iron river should linger along in the future as it has in the past, now that its wealth has been so amply approximated. It requires money to make money, and we confidently look forward to the time when the same spirit of enthusiasm and liveliness in trade sna!l characterize our people as during the bright days of 1871 2-3with perhaps silver and gold the circulating

teresting reference to the mining interest of with any significant success, and were it not for the that neighborhood:

Our district of Thunder Bay was first really prominently called into notice in the mineral world by the discovery of silver near Current river, by Mr. P. M'Kellar, and since that time traces, as well as a large number of encouraging veins, have been discovered, all of them showing, to a greater or less extent, the presence of that valuon account of our being a new field for mining enterprise, and also from the too sanguine expectations of those parties who have invested their money in our veins, expectcapital, companies have been started with inadequate working capital (the stock forming it in many cases un. assessable), even to test, as a preliminary experiment, the value of the properties they have acquired. When this capital has been expended without a return, after sinking and driving, we may say a few feet in comparison to what they do in other silver districts, the companies either carry on operations on such a scale, the extent of which neither benefits themselves or the country in general, or abandon the veins entirely, till their next neighbors, if fortunate enough, find something for them.

So thoroughly has the above been the system of management of the mines in this district, that we place before our readers a short sketch of one of the richest and | The Marquette Journal never said anything of the oldest mines on this continent, from which our capital- kind. So, Don Henderson, in addition to being ists may take a lesson.

The mine to which we have referred is the famous Mexican silver mines, Real del Monte, which at one time had no better prospects than any of our own. Not much is known of them before 1749, but most tlikely they were discovered and worked by the original Indians. In the above year we learn that a merchant named Terrores, and a miner were granted these mines on condition of effecting their drainage, to do which it took ten years, but although necessarily an immense amount of capital had been expended during that period, yet in 32 years the large amount of $15,000,000 had I een extracted. In 1818 the original owners quite abandoned the mines they having ceased to produce mineral in paying quantiformed to work them. They encountered great difficulties in the first commencement, everything had gone to wreck an i ruin-all the works had been destroyed. Everything had to be commenced anew, buildings had to be he was told of the murder of Morgan by one of the raised, the mines cleared, and a macadamized road constructed fifteen miles in length, the only one of that description in Mexico to the present day.

We will review the result of their enterprise and energy: Twenty-two years after their commencing operations, their expenditures had reached the enormous sum of $15,000,000, while their receipts only reached $10,000,company gave up the venture in 1848. A Mexican company then took the mines in hand, under the superintend- alive? Weed, you're a fraud. ence of an Englishman; they almost immediately struck the great Rosario vein, and since that time, so much for energy and perseverance, besides paying for the working Tons. they have been yielding a clear profit of $1,000,000 per ansent us, are ringed heavily with blue pencil marks?

If our capitalists would only show a little of the enterprise and courage displayed by the owners of the above noted mines, many prosperous mines in our district would be working to-day, and we are confident benefiting themselves as well as the country in general.

The above history of the famous Mexican mine, one of the oldest on the continent has only been placed before our readers to show that capital must be invested as in every business transaction, and more especially in mining before an adequate return can be obtained. It is with pleasure that we see now commenced among of the mining interest in Thunder Bay.

Most of our old residents may remember the summer of 1872 when exploration was carried on to a large extent, and when many properties were taken up on the basis of the assay of the vein matter, giving as an average $40 to $50 per ton of silver and gold. These properties have since that time lain dormant for the simple reason the only available establishment for reduction of ores was at Wyandotte which charged the enormous sum of $100 per ton for the actual smelting, the companies owning the said ores having also to pay freight and assay charges, so that acaually to pay for the extraction of the native metal ores had to assay at least $1 5 per ton, a result which in other silver mining districts gives an enormous profit. This enormous charge has been the means of throwing found accidentally cropping out.

The enterprise to which I refer is the reduction works of the Lake Superior Milling Co., of which Mr. Stewart is managing director. Mr. Steward on his arrival here last fall engaged in reporting on the Thunder Bay mine, appreciated at once what was required in this district, and from his former large experience in Colarado and Nevada, where mining has become a legitimate business, not a speculative one, conceived the idea of erecting a mill for ers in nig iron and iron ore. Claveland f the crushing and amalgamating of silver ores.

By the process which he is adopting, namely amalgams tion, the largest proportion of the silver of commerce is extracted, the reason for which being that it has been found that rich deposits like Silver Isiet are the exception and that veins producing $40 to $50 per ton are in the majority, and the most profitable, as witness the Comstoci

 Mr. Steward appreciating the value and advantge o roasting and smelting which involves a large expenditure of capital, judiciously selected the cheapest process, which he is now engaged in, although our ores here warrant the more expensive pr. cess, if the necessary works were in our district, charging a reasonable amount for reduction However, he is prepared whenever the business of the country requires it, to combine the present works with those of the smelting process.

Few among our residents and mining proprietors thoroughly appreciate the advantage that is going to be derived from the enterprise at present r. vived.

was that the market was overstocked. This applies to everything consumed by armies. Take also the important article of iron. The war devoured all that could be produced. Furnaces and rolling mills were multiplied beyond example. We are also to consider, what is not perhaps of less importance, that the building of railroads for this vast country has given employment to men and iron manufacturers beyond limit. But the railroads having been completed and supplied with equipment, and the war being over, the manufacture of iron has accumulated beyond the demand.

August 21, 1875.]

"The railroad investments are also in excess, and railroad competition, with the stagnation in many kinds of manufacturing, has resulted in the embarrassment of railroad corporations, so that near $400,000,000 of railroad bonds have been dishonored by the failure to meet their last semi-annual coupons. This of itself is sufficient to affect the financial market deeply. Both labor and capital have to seek other employment, and a large amount of capital is necessarily lost in the change. Meantime the market gradually recuperates as the accumulated production is consumed by the natural demand. The time required for such readjustments of investments and employments, and for the consumption of accumulated products in the market, can only be determined by experience. The only wonder is that greater embarrassment was not sooner experienced. But the consequences of such an accumulation of productions are not always developed as promptly as we should expect."

to rise. There are some people who make sport of presentiments; but, after all, presentiments are a handy thing to have around. Where would I be to-day if I had not had a presentiment! In accordance with my presentiment I have risen, as it were, to a point of order. Like a great many politicians I arose by means of gas. I regret the fact that there is only two of us-Prof. Donaldson and myself-as I would like to belong to the upperten. Prof. Donaldson seems to be a very pleasant gentleman, although a philosopher and an zeronaut. Although it is scarcely an hour since I struggled into eminence, the restraint of my position is already beginning to be irksome to me and wear upon my spirits. I cannot help reflecting that if we fall, we fall like Lucifer, out of the heavens, and that upon our arrival upon earth, or rather upon water, as we are now over the mid le of Lake Michigan, we would be literally dead."

cleared for a great many years and is now ready for occupancy and garden cultivation, without the removal of a stump, root or tree, is also in its favor.

In the way of business the new town will also be particularly favored, as from its location it is certainly destined to be the scaport and base of supplies of all the mining interests in that vicinity. There is an excellent harbor now for all small craft, having six feet of water in the clear, and it is thought that at least ten feet can be secured with a small outlay in dredsing. Should they not succeed in getting water enough for the larger class of boats, there can be a pier built which will reach 14 feet of water in 500 feet from shore with a good sand bottom, and which by means of the natural protections will be accessible in anything less than a gale of wind.

C. H. Pratt, Esq., of Ashland, a surveyor of acknowledged ability, has been engaged to do the work, and we understand that Capt. Beaser proposes to place the lots at very reasonable prices, with discounts to good improvements. The p'at may be seen and lote secured at his office in Iron River.

A lumber yard, with a full stock of everything in that line, has already been established there by the Ashland Lumber company, and a general supply store, meat market, &c., will be in blast in a short time.

THE news that the seventeen steamers of the Northern Transportation line were again to be put in motion was one of the most acceptable items of the past week. These steamers have been the only ones upon which one migh accomplish the entire journey from Chicago to Ogdensburgh-a route than which none combines greater variety or pleasure. They are again under the management of Mr. Philo Chamberlain, which is another item of news very acceptable to everybody, for under his fostering care the line grew to large proportions and its great popularity, and had he retained it there would have been no laying up for four months-as there has been this season-but the white piped steamers would have been the first to troops sent out by Spain and a reinforcement of 10,000 have heralded the opening of navigation last spring, as have been welcomed in every port from that time to this. They are now all ready, or will be in a day or two, and on Friday of this week there will be steamers of the line in this port bound each way. We understand Captain Waterbury will command the St. Lawrence and Captain Duddleson the New York, both in Milwaukee, whither both of these gentlemen started last Friday. There are several weeks of delightful traveling weather left yet, and already there are applications for passage on the N. T. boats, and the season promises to be a lively one .-

Parries having cotton rags to dispose of

[CONTINUED FROM SECOND PAGE.] supposing the case, the first question I should ask would be, did she go over to the enemy's campin other words, forsake me for an old rival ?" "N-n-o!" answered Lumley's Pardner, slowly. "It was some one I had never seen. I've nothing

"Why, then," went on Lumley—"truth some-times cuts hard, old fellow—I think it was your tault, and not the girl's. It's a man's privilege to speak his mind; a woman's destiny to fold her hands and wait. She can never be quite sure unless he has spoken out. Then perhaps another, who has

Lumley's Pardner dropped his head upon his reast. "Poor girl! I never thought of that,"

I do not know just how it was that I remembered all the words so plain. There was no more said, Pardner stooped to his ear:and, feeling guilty-like for stealing a mate's secret which it was not meant for me to know, I crept to my shanty, bunked in, and let the broken pick lie over until morning.

I always felt sorry for Lumley's Pardner after

Well, for a time things went on the old way. Then Lumley's Pardner came down with mountain fever, and Lumley nursed him through it. He was as tender as a woman, was Lumley! When I used to drop in of nights, occasionally to lend a hand at watching, the sick man's eyes would follow him about the room, in a helpless, beseeching way that was-pitiful to see.

It was only the ghost of Lumley's Pardner that got up from it, but the two were always nigher to-

When Lumley got back to the claim, and Lumley's Pardner was just able to crawl about, they came into a wonderful streak of luck Lumley the turn of a die, rich men. Mining, after all, is a brave. game of chance-you buy your ticket, but it does not always win; there are plenty of blanks to

It does not matter the exact amount this prize netted, if I had remembered it. Lumley was jubilant over his "pile," anxious to sell out and leave the mines; so nobody was surprised when his partner bought him out for a good round sum, saying in his quiet way, that he guessed he'd stay and see the thing through It was very quiet in camp the morning that Lumley went away. The boys were sorry to lose him, for he had not any but well-wishers among us.

Well, six months went by, and then came a little white letter, "scribed" in a dainty woman's hand, to Lumley's Pardner. The man trembled all over like a leaf when it was put into his hand, took it into his cabin, and shut fast the door. Within the next half-hour he came out again in a desperate hurry, saddled his mule, and rode off down the "Unexpected business," was his hasty explanation. Could not say how soon he might be back. The news came to us at last by a party of trad-ers, stopping at noon in camp. Then I knew what t hose marks of weakness about his mouth stood for; Lumley had never left the city at all. He had sat down to the gaming table, one night, and gotten up from it, the next morning, poorer than he had come into the mines. He had first won, then lost and won, and won again; and then that last total blank stared him in the face.

Lumley could never give up at that. He must win it all back! Luck was surely in store for him yet! He haunted the gambling hells, playing reck-lessly, desperately, so long as he could win enough to keep the ball rolling; pawning his watch, his ring, even his clothing, when other resources pation on his fair, womanish face-a pretty nearly played out individual.

The blood rushed all over his face, for the manliness yet left in him could but feel the shame of that meeting. But there was no backing out now. Lumley's Pardner took him to one side.

"I've heard of you, old man," he said, in his matter-of-fact way, "and I've come to see you out of this. How much do you say will clear you up and have a trifle ahead?"

Lumley never raised his eyes.

Lumley never raised his eyes "Old pard" he answered, choking up, "you're a better friend than I deserve. Don't ask me to take anything from you. I went in any eyes open, and, thanking you all the san, have nobody

Lumley's Pardner laid a broad hand on each of the pititully drooping shoulders.

"Old man, when the fever had me down, I'd ha' gone under if it hadn't been for you. So help me God! I'd rather ha' died than taken what I did at your hands. Do you deny me this small return now? What's a paltry sum of money between you and me, and the 'little mother' waitin' at home?"

I unley put down, his head, mon, that, and oried

Lumley put down his head upon that, and cried like a baby; the which, if it be not manly, I like him the better for. There are tears, I am thinking, that are far from disgracing even the eyes of a man. "I'm ashamed of myself through and through for what's gone by," were Lumley's next words, but I can't give it up now. Matters can't be any worse, and there's a chance of bettering. Perhaps to-night I shall win it all back."

There was the old willfulness and pride, and the new fascination of the gaming table. There was no turning nim back, no moving him from that re-

Lumley's Pardner took him by the arm. "Either way, I'm bound to see you through," he said. "Come." So night after night, as Lumley played, there stood Lumley's Pardner looking on, with never a word of that little white letter, his answering mes sage, or the two passengers on board an ocean steamer bound for California. Despite Lumley's hopefulaess, luck never turned It was the same feverish unrest and tedious waiting, the sense of degration by day, and at night the brilliantly lighted gambling-hell, the excitement, the fascination, trembling betwixt hope and un-certainty, the frequent potations to steady his shaken nerves, and, as the night wore on, uncertainty deepening into failure and disappointment; and each morning Lumley's Pardner led him slowly and silently away, until time wearing on, brought at last this appeal :-"For God's sake, old man, when will you let up?" "So help me heaven, as soon as I get back two thousand dollars, I swear never to touch cards or dice again." And Lumley was dead in earnest this time. Still, he would accept nothing from his

The night the Ocean Belle was signaled into port, Lumley's Pardner beckoned "Monte Bill" aside (I reckon you have heard of Monte Bill, the best brace-dealer and short-card player west of the Mississippi), and some secret understanding passed

In the midst of the game, Lumley's Pardner left his post, which was something unusual, passing Monte Bill on his way to the door. It was not generally noticed, but as he passed he dropped a small, compact package into the gambler's hand; then, sloucning his sombreto over his eyes, he left

Pausing in the street, Lumley's Pardner looked anxiously down. It would have been dark but for the street lamps, for it was full two hours to moonrise; but down by the whari shone out the gleam of a new signal-light, which, poised at mast-head, glowered through the dark like the fiery eye of a gigantic Cyclops; the Ocean Belle was in. Ten minutes later, pushing his way through the bustling crowd that thronged the dock, he hurried across the plank and made his way straight to the

The past seemed all a dream, as he stood again with wildly beating heart before a once familiar form—familiar still, though bearing the maturer crown of motherhood. Her face was even fairer than of old, blushing with its own wild-rose tints of loveliness, her soft eyes shining up in glad expecta-tion. The broad sombrero, slouched over his forehead, shaded his features. She saw only bronzed cheeks and a strong, brown beard. The tremor in his voice might have meant diffidence

"Pardon me, madam, you are-I believe—that is to say-I am Lumley's Pardner." She held out a white hand cordially.

"And my husband?" "Is well. I am to take you to him." He took timidly the hand she extended, awk-wardly the little woman thought, and then let it go. "Give me the child."

He took the sleeping boy in his arms, and so burdened, piloted the way to a carriage close beside the wharf. Putting her inside, he laid the child gently, almost reverently, upon her lap. "We're to drive round and take up Lumley. It's only a few minutes' ride," One last searching glance from under the protecting sombrero, and he closed the carriage door, mounting to his place beside the driver.

Oddly enough, Lumiey had just finished a winning game with Monte Bill when Lumley's Pardner learned to love her, does speak. She feels the heed of love in her life; women as often marry to be loved as because they love. Then, instead of wasting her life for that which may never come to her, she takes up the fate lying at her feet. Does she go be the state which may never come to her, she takes up the fate lying at her feet. Does she go began to shuffle for another stake; not that he had began to shuffle for another stake; not the shuffle for another stake; not that he had began to shuffle for another stake; not the shuffle but a long way ahead of anything else was the thought that luck had turned—that he had only to follow it up and win back all the past. Lumley's "You'd better throw up the game. The 'little mother' and your boy are waiting here, outside." Lumley started-half rose to his feet, looked up into his partner's face, then at the cards, then at the door, then wistfully back upon the cards and the gold. As with a heavy sigh he sunk into his seat again, Lumley's Pardner, dashing the cards from his hand, raked up the stakes and forced the money into Lumley's pocket.

"How long will you keep your wife and child waiting alone, at night, in a strange city, before the door of a gambling-house ?" The thrust struck home. Like a man awakening from a dream, Lumley sprung up, crushed on his hat, and flew to the door. Once in the little woman's arms and he was safe. Lumley's Pardner knew him well enough to be sure of that. He never followed him, but slipped out of the side-door, and the next day saw him back in camp, a trifle pale, and sterner than was his wont, struck into a big pocket, and there they were, in but the clear gray eyes dauntlessly honest and

And I reckon, to this day, Lumley never knows how much be owes his old mate, or that his Lulie had one true lover, whom he once knew and appropriated to himself in the person of Lumley's Pardner .- Overland Monthly.

WHERE THE GOLD GOES .- It is estimated that $100,000,000 in gold and silver is paid annually by this country as interest to foreign bond-holders of national, state, city and railroad bonds; and at least $40,000,000 more is taken out of the country, every year, by tourists. Moreover our exports of miscelancous products come short of our imports by several million, which balance must also be added to the enormous sum of $140,000,000 to meet our annual payments abroad. Were our gold and silver mines to cease producing for two or three years, we should become bankrupt as a nation; whereas, by a little more economy in our exports, or by a little more de-termined effort to produce at home that which we now buy abroad, the United States might soon become the richest and most prosperous nation on the globe. These facts are repeated year after year by the public prints, but the thriftless work of monetary depletion still goes on. The gold and silver mines of the Pacific coast seem to be the only medium by which the catastrophy of national bank-ruptey can be warded off. The nation can well afford to hold them free to all comers, and in every way to encourage their being worked to their utmost capacity.—Scientific Press.

RECENTLY a foreign embassy sought the assistance of the English police to find a young girl who had just become the heiress of several millions. The instructions were vague, and the task was necessarily given to one of the keenest detectives. At the end of six weeks the detective reported to headquarters So Lumley's Pardner found him—heavy-eyed, with a seedy flashiness in his dress, marks of dissiher about a month ago in a dressmaker's shop," was the answer. "And what then?" "I married her yesterday, and this morning I received her six

> PROSPERITY AT HOME.—It is a noteworthy fact that despite of the alarming depression in the iron interest throughout Europe, the eight Bessemer steel establishments in this country are every one of them running to their fullest capacity, with orders still coming in upon them; while at the same time three new establishments are nearly ready to go into operation. It may be further remarked that the iron interest, generally, is unusually prosperous offered as follows: first, $100, ; second, $50.; third, in all its departments. The above, taken in connection with the facts that American iron and steel are both beginning to outrank in quality the English product, and that certain brands of American pig iron are finding a market in England, at rates profitable to American producers are most encouraging, and point to the probability that the United States will soon be independent of Europe for this important commothe meeting to be published in the Marquette MIN- dity. - Scientific Press.

A PUBLIC SERVANT DEPARTED .- A lightning rod man is dead. It was out West. He sold a farmer one of his lightning rods on trust. Two weeks thereafter the barn protected by the rod was struck by lightning and burned up. The lightning rod man presented his bill, nevertheless, with characteri-tic assurance. He was shot nine times, and then ordered to report at that time. At the adjourned jamin Franklin.—Rochester Democrat.

NOTWITHSTANDING the recent failures in England, it is said that there is no panie; and the feeling excited by the failures has quieted them. It seems that the failures did not produce any appreciable effect upon the money market. In proof of this, it is asserted that never during its existence of one hundred and eighty years has the Bank of England ticipated, and the committee of arrangements will held so much specie as it holds to-day. The rate of do everything in their power to make it pleasant discount is three per cent, and bids fair to fall to two

Waking up the British Iron Masters.—A correspondent writing the Colliery Guardian from Wolverhampton, under date of June 4th, says:
"Samples of American from have this week been shown in Wolverhampton, produced by Dank's pud dling machine, and the quality of the iron and the comparatively low price at which it is sold, have ex cited not a little surprise. The whole question of mechanical puddling has been once again revived by this circumstance, and leading South Staffordshire ironmasters affirm that it will be necessary, if the district is to hold its own against rivals, not only to have puddling of iron done by machine, but also to apply the blast to the puddling furnace, by which means, it is said, slack instead of coal can be used equally well for the process, at an obvious great saving in the cost of find. saving in the cost of fuel."

Time is a great master, and brings many changes. "Little Fanny" and "Master Eddy," as they are called, who are still with the troupe, have grown to respectable man and womanhood. The old gentleman and lady are now in their seventles; and of course can lend but little towards the entertainment. But their presence helps to remind one of the pleasant early associations. This is the thirty-fourth season they have been on the road, and have added new attractions as the age required. Their long experience has enabled them to secure the services of the best per. formers in the country. They now number twelve performers and an auxiliary of a fine silver cornet band. Prominent among the members now attached to the troupe is Mr. Alf. Wyman, the popular comedian; Frank Hewett, solo, flute and picolo player. The boy wonders, "Dot and Jap," and little "Yakee Neu," the infant cornetist, and a host of others. They are considered to be the best bell-ringers in the market. THE LEGISLATIVE EXCURSION .- On Wednesday evening the governor and staff, accompanied by many members of the legislature and of the state press, arrived by special train, and were received by a large crowd of our citizens at the depot The Marquette chasseurs turned out in considerable force, in full uniform, accompanied by their brass band. On the arrival of the train a salute was fired in honor of the distinguished visitors The governor and staff being placed in carriages at the crossing on the corner of Front and Superior streets, where the train stopped to allow the party to disembark, and where the military and band were waiting to receive them. As soon as the carriages containing the governor's party were in readiness they proceeded to the Northwestern Hotel preceded by the band and chasseurs. Arrived at the hotel, the governor passed before the military, who were drawn up in front of the hotel with arms at the "present." The chasseurs then returned to the armory, and the excursionists repaired to the dining hall. After supper the party met at Mather's Hall to discuss the route they should take on their way home. The sentiments of the party seemed greatly at variance, as was to be expected from so many different individuals and tastes, although, we believe, the majority were in favor of the Mackinaw and Petoskey route, which is certainly much more pleasant than the route by rail, if one has the time at his disposal to make it. On Thursday the party left here at 7:45 A. M. for L'Anse and Houghton, with the expectation of visiting the famous Calumet & Hecla copper mine on Friday, and returning to Marquette this evening, visiting the iron mines on the way. The party will spend Sunday in this city, and on Monday they will be taken to Stannard's Rock by steamer, to enjoy a little sport on the best fishing grounds in the world. Returning to Marquette the party will be treated to a ball in the evening, and will probably leave the city Tuesday, the larger portion of them going by steamer to Mackinaw and returning home via Petoskey and the Grand Rapids & Indiana, and Detroit, Lansing & Lake Michigan, and other rail-

A Woman's Revenge .- in the latter part of the seventeenth century a French woman of extraordinary beauty startled Florence, in Italy, by the splendor of her equipage and entertainments. Her husband, the Count —, had been dead some two years, and the brilliant widow made such attractive use of the millions he had left her that she soon ceased to number her courtiers on her fingers. One night she discovered a man in the assembly at her palace whom it was her destiny to love. He, too, was remarkably handsome, and for a time the fairest couple whom the society of Florence in those stately day had looked upon were thought to be destined to a life of mutual happiness. But one more puissant than the French countess, or more dexterous, at least, suddenly descended from the north and captivated Adonis. This was a Russian woman of high rank, whose residences and acres were scattered through every country in Europe. She departed with her bridegroom at the close of a season of revels, after inviting her Gallican rival to become her guest for a fortnight in the course of the approaching summer. The French woman sur-prised the victor by accepting the invitation, and in the brief July of 1692, at a superb summer resi-dence on the southern shore of the gulf of Finland, hard by the site of the present splendid Peterhoff, the memory of the antagonism at Florence was apprently laughed and whiled away.

The beautiful countess did not leave her friends without obtaining from them a promise to visit her at her own lavorite retreat the very next year. In the following July she welcomed them to an immense ancient country seat on a slope of the western range of the Carpathian mountains. From the day of their arrival they were treated, day and night, to a succession of pleasures far surpassing any that see had received from their hands. Her retainers were numerous, trained to perfection, and obeyed their mistress with the celerity, silence and humility of slaves. Her horses were of the noblest breeds, and the bridle paths led through wild and charming scenery. Her suppers, laid with the glittering display of that age, offered the dishes and the wines of three countries. Harpers and singers oined at a distance in giving the zest of Martini's, Palestrina's, Gasparini's music to these feasts, which were followed almost nightly by theatrical representations, or performances of magicians, or dances by young men and girls, which sometimes took on a disheveled and bewildering gayety.

The last week of the visit was rendered still more brilliant and delightful by the presence of a large number of distinguished guests from various quarters of Europe—friends of the countess, who seldoin let a summer pass without accepting her Bohemian hospitality. And the last night before their departure was set for an entertainment which promised to surpass everything that had preceded it in the respects of novelty and beauty.

The countess had arranged a series of mythological and Biblical tableaux vivants, and a number of the guests of both sexes, including her former lover, the husband of the Russian, had been prevailed on to take parts in them.

At the close of a magnificent feast and wassail the company separated. Those who were to appear in the representations were conducted to their tiring rooms, while the rest stayed to take seats or lie at ease as an audience upon the vast lounges, stuffed leathern ottomans, and heaps of skins by which a hundred servants quickly replaced the chairs and tables at one end of the great diningball. The Russian bride occupied an elevated seat of honor in the front of this throng, and when all was ready the hostess entered and sat beside her. The entertainment met with enthusiastic acceptance, and no wonder. The comeliest men and women whom the countess could entice from the circle of her friends and select from her large retinue, displayed in postures imitated from the most celebrated groups of Greek and Italian statury and the best known sacred paintings, likenesses breathing with yulgar life, yet not un worthy, in the enraptured eyes of the company, to be compared with their classic models.

At last the heavy curtains were drawn close after a splendid allegorical tableau, which had comprised more than one hundred human figures, and the company prepared to disperse.

"Stay !" cried the countess, rising with a graceful and commanding gesture; "the last scene ought always to be the best, and the best is yet to come. I pray you, resume your seats. (All obeyed, and an interval of a few minutes occurred, during which conversation gradually ceased, and the great hall became protoundly silent. Then the curtains were slowly withdrawn, revealing, against a background of storm-clouds and darkness, an appallingly realistic representation of the crucifixion of Christ. At the loot of a rugged cross, whose upright beam reached nearly to the ceiling, were clustered in every variety of attitude two or three scores of mocking Jews, all lifting fingers of scorn and hatred, some gazing in each other's faces with looks of triumphant glee, some gloating on the spectacle above their heads. The figure against the cross, on which, and on several of the upturned faces, a bright light was cast from torches behind a screen, was seen to be actually spiked through hands and feet, from which the blood had not ceased trickling. The body drooped, the knees were slightly bent, the head feil forward with its crown of thorns. The whole figure, cruel death. A shudder and then a murmur of horror infected the spectators of this scene. From the dais, on which she had been gayly chatting with her hostess, the lovely Russian was seen to bend forward with a terrrible cry, and then to rush screaming down the room to the foot of the cross, scattering the ountess' menial mimics who were gathered there. Reaching up, she clasped the knees of the man crucified, and called, to ears that were forever deaf, her murdered husband's name.

ABOARD one of the sleeping cars which arrived in Detroit the other morning was an Iowa man, whose big boots had been blackened with the rest while he slept. When he came to put them on he asked what the charges were, and the porter told him whatever he saw fit. The traveler pulled out a nickel, smiled patronizingly, and handed it out with the remark: "There—you may keep the whole of it. When I'm around home I like to know where my money goes to, but when I travel I pay my way, and want to have things pleasant."

MRS. F. M. STEELE, of Marquette, has published a pamplet entitled "What Women Should Wear." It is supposed to be a hand-book of economy, but how any man could look over its frightful catalogue of overskirts, and-and chemiljupes, and stays, and other horrible things, and then tell a young man that he can marry and live comfortably on less than $4,835,403 72 a year, would be one of those stretches of diabolical malice that a simple mind can neither admire or understand.

Grand Pacific Hotel

CHICAGO, ILL

Having purchased the entire furniture and taken a lease of this magnificent hotel, I have admitted Mr. Samuel M. Turner, formerly of the old Tremont House, and late of the Palmer House, Chicago, and Mr. Tyler B. Gaskill, formerly of the Revere House, Boston, to an interest in the business, which will be conducted under the name of John B. Drake & Co.

The house covers an entire block, having a frontage south and east of over 500 feet; is admirably located for the convenience of guests, is thoroughly built in the best manner, with all modern improvements. Every floor from basement to roof incloses a fourinch layer of cement, which, with other safeguards, render it comparatively fire-proof. The ventilation is perfect, and the whole is being refitted with the addition of new and elegant firniture as required.

The service, table and other accommodations being the same to all guests, will be maintained fully up to the high standard of their predecessors, and equal to any house in this or any other country; but the proprietors have decided to meet the just expectations of the public in these times of financial depression by graduating prices at from $3 to $4.50 per day, according to the location of the rooms occupied.
