[Ishpeming, March 20, 1880.]

shipping season was unusually long last year, and the further fact that a large amount of preparatory work is going on in the mines. They will take out the ore more lively than ever the coming summer.

You can always tell when there has been a pay day in the mines by the broken window glass on Main street. And you can always tell the extent of the money paid out by the number of broken panes. This glass breaking has become such a regular thing, that with a little mathematical skill it can be accurately computed just how many dollars of miners' pay will break a pane of glass in Ishpeming.

NEW MILLINERY STORE.—Mrs. M. Odgers, of this place, and Miss Emma Stephens, of Platteville, Wis., are to open a new millinery store about the first of April. They have rented the second story of D. F. Wadsworth's bank building for that purpose. Miss Stephens is an experienced milliner, which will undoubtedly insure for her a large business.

RELIGIOUS.—Rev. J. F. Borg, of Knoxville, Ill., has recently arrived in this city and taken charge of the Swedish Lutheran congregation. The congregation has been without a regular pastor since the departure of Rev. A. Edgren. The new pastor is highly spoken of by his parishioners, who are making every effort to impress him favorably with the place and the people, and make his residence here a pleasant one.

PERSONAL.—C. H. Hall, Esq., returned from his trip east and south on Friday, the 12th inst.

Mr. John E. Morrison, now of Leadville, is again in this city after an absence of nearly two years. He will return to his new home in a week or so.

Miss Nora McKenna, left Saturday for Chicago, where she will spend several weeks visiting friends and purchasing spring millinery.

NARROW ESCAPE.—Mr. I. N. Oie came very near losing a two years old son last Wednesday, through suffocation. The child attempted to swallow a large sleeve button, which stuck in its throat and strangled it. Dr. Wenster happened to be in the house at the time, and luckily, by a skillful operation, extracted the button just in time to save the boy's life. He was turning black in the face when relieved.

FREQUNTERS of Austin's hall will hardly know the place, so thoroughly changed is everything about it. The woodwork has been repainted, the walls papered and the ceiling kalsomined. The work is very artistically done and much taste was displayed therein. Around the chandeliers are center pieces of rich paper in a field of pink, which is enclosed in a dark border. A narrow strip of the wall at the curve in the ceiling is kalsomined in blue, while beautiful paper with heavy and rich border, encircles the wall. The colors blend pleasingly, and the whole has a rich and elegant appearance.

ACCORDING to the annual report of the city treasurer, (which was handed to us too late for publication last week) the finances of Ishpeming are shown to be in a condition which cannot be other than gratifying to every resident who takes an interest in the city. The city is practically out of debt and has an ample fund in the treasury. The many costly improvements of the past are paid for, and there is still money left. There are many improvements still to be made in the line of grading streets and building sidewalks, which will no doubt be pushed forward vigorously this year.

THE extremely cold weather froze up the water main Thursday afternoon last. How badly it is frozen is hard to tell. The principal sufferer from this mishap is Mr. Nelson, as it left the Nelson house without a drop of water Thursday night. The stoppage of the water supply at this house amounts to a serious misfortune, and is an unlooked for dilemma. The hotel can't run a day without water, and how to get it under these circumstances is a question. At this writing Mr. Nelson is at work laying pipes to a shaft of the Barnum mine in the hopes of being able to supply the house, and he probably has made the connection by this time.

PAINFUL ACCIDENT.—It was rumored around town last Monday morning, that a boiler had exploded at the National mine and that the engineer who was near it had been killed. This proved to be a false report; but nevertheless the mine was the scene of a very serious accident to one of the men employed there. That part of the boiler called the hand-hole plate became loose early in the morning, allowing some steam to escape. When the engineer went to fasten it the entire plate suddenly came off, enveloping the man with scalding steam, almost killing him on the spot. He was horribly scalded about the hands, arms and body; though his injuries were very painful, they were not fatal, and he is gradually recovering under the physician's care.

ABOUT the cheekiest thing done for a good while can be credited to Michael Barrett. He was on a drunk Monday night, and not wanting or not being able to get home to his lodgings, he determined to put up at some down-town place. He chose Wilkinson & Stewart's marble shop for his hotel, and breaking a pane out of the front door, he crawled in, built a rousing fire, lit a lamp and went to bed on the soft side of a dry goods case which stood behind the stove. When "Wilk" came down to the shop next morning he was not a little surprised to find his glass broken, a good fire in the stove on which stood a lighted lamp, and a man snoring peacefully on his dry goods case. He soon awakened the fellow to a realization of the situation, which was decidedly embarrassing, as he had not intended to stay long enough to get caught. Wilkinson restrained his desire to punch the intruder, and instead had him arrested and taken before Squire Kennedy, where he was placed under bonds to appear for trial to-day. He would have found it much cheaper to have put up at a hotel.

SHEER LUCK.

A Detective's Adventure With a Criminal.

ONE pleasant evening recently two men were seated in a cozy little room not far from St. Louis, engaged in conversation concerning criminals. One was a detective connected with a Chicago agency. "Well," remarked the detective, after a pause in the conversation, "I will tell you a peculiar little incident that happened several years ago to a brother detective, which will illustrate how luck sometimes assists us in accomplishing an object which otherwise might be unattainable.

"Several years ago," he continued, "as he ejected a cloud of smoke from his mouth, "a noted forger was wanted very badly in Chicago, where he had been indulging in such crookedness as rendered him liable to occupy the Penitentiary for a term of years if he were caught. The case was placed in Pinkerton's hands and one of his men detailed to work it up. He was fortunate enough to obtain a clew to the much-wanted individual's whereabouts, and following it up he at length spotted his man at Toronto, Can., which you know is on Lake Ontario. The detective threw himself in the way of the forger, became acquainted with him under an assumed name, and gradually ingratiated himself in his favor. Forgery not being an extraditable offense, it was impossible to make the arrest in Canada, so the detective was obliged to adopt another line of tactics. He made known his intention of crossing over into the States, and the forger determined to go to the boat and see him off. Once on board the detective kept him engrossed in interesting conversation, and with such consummate tact did he play his part that the crooked gentleman did not notice that the boat had started until it was far out in the lake, for they had gone below to take a social glass at parting. When the forger found the boat gradually receding from the Canadian shore, with no possibility of getting back immediately, he fumed and swore for a time, but seeing that that did not better matters in the least, cooled down and determined to make the best of a bad job.

"As soon as that imaginary line in the middle of the lake which divides the two countries had been passed, the detective revealed himself, and clapping on the nippers, arrested his man. They arrived on the other shore at length without adventure, and boarding the lightning express on the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern that night, they started on their journey. There happened to be few persons in the car in which the two sat. The detective was almost completely worn out from loss of sleep, and as it was a through train he determined to obtain a little Morpheus. Placing the prisoner on the inner side of the seat, he so disposed himself next him that he imagined the slightest move would awake him. These arrangements completed, he fell asleep in an easy state of mind. He does not know how long he slept until he awoke suddenly and found to his chagrin that the forger was gone. It is a rule of our agency that if a man is sent upon the trail of a depreddator, and fails in bringing him back, he loses his place; so you see that his reputation as well as his position depended upon his prompt action. He quickly decided upon his line of action, and, walking with assumed carelessness through the entire train, he examined every nook and corner that the prisoner could possibly be stowed away in. His search was fruitless. On his return he was accosted by a brakeman, who inquired: "Are you looking for your friend?" "The detective answered in the affirmative.

"Oh," said the brakeman, "he got off at the last station where we stopped for water. He seemed as if he didn't want to disturb your sleep—for he got out over the back of the seat."

"He was soon assisted into his clothing, the next passing train was hailed and they arrived at their destination without further adventure."

Torture in Russia.

THE St. Petersburg Seyn Otschetskua (Anglice, Son of the Fatherland) contains the following accounts of revolting instances of tyranny, of which the village of Kagalnik, in Southern Russia, was recently the scene. An inhabitant of that place, one Philip Kabaltschenko, an infirm man of sixty, was summoned on the 29th of September before the Burgomaster and asked if he had brought a balance of certain taxes that were due. Kabaltschenko, bowing to the earth, begged for time as he had no means whatever of paying.

"As soon as I have earned something," he added, "I will pay all." "Wait, you old dog," shouted the Burgomaster, "I will find a way of squeezing the money from you. Bind him to the post."

In the twinkling of an eye two officials seized the trembling old man, bound him to a strong post in the courtyard and fastened his arms with ropes to his back, the Burgomaster looking on.

"Now, old beast," he cried to the old man, who was bareheaded and motionless, "will you pay your taxes?" "Christ is my witness," was the reply, "I have not a single copeck."

"Then you will remain where you are."

"Set me free, for the love of God; my wife and children are famishing at home."

"Pay what is due."

"Have compassion on my age; I am the laughing-stock of the mob."

"Let them laugh, old thief!"

"I am fainting," groaned the poor wretch in a scarcely audible voice.

"My lads," said the tyrant upon this, "give him a shower bath."

The officials obeyed by pouring two cans of cold water upon the fainting man, which restored him to consciousness.

"Now unbind him," commanded the tyrant, "and take him for a walk through the streets."

This having been done the Burgomaster ordered him to be fastened to the public pillory, where he was kept for the whole night. Police were stationed on the spot to prevent compassionate passers-by from offering him a piece of bread or a glass of water. During the night one of the old man's children, a girl of thirteen, brought her father a small roll. The police, seizing her, flogged her almost to death, and ultimately threw her into prison. The rain then began to fall heavily. The police sheltered themselves under a roof, leaving their prisoner exposed to the weather. On the following day the martyr was released, when being unable to walk, he was conveyed home on a cart. The poor man, after lingering for a fortnight, died in consequence of the treatment to which he had been subjected.

The above is not the only deed of cruelty with which this Burgomaster, Stepan Filatjewitsch Puschkarento, has lately distinguished himself. Within the last week or two he ordered two inhabitants of Kagalnik, Volkowski and Woroschento by name, to receive one hundred strokes and forty strokes respectively with a cane for quite insignificant offenses. Maljawschenko, Pog-nirybko and Lysenko, three members of the local council, and the Tax-gatherer Fisenko, were also bound by his orders to the public pillory, their faces being hideously masked and books placed in their hands. In this position they remained for full twenty-five hours. Kornej Swellitschuy, eighty years old, was bound to the pillory for four hours for insulting one of the Burgomaster's grandchildren, and a cashiered officer was kept there for six hours.—Berlin Cor. London Standard.

A Horse's Revenge.

THE Society for the Protection of Animals is not remarkable for its activity in this country. The police appear to think it no business of theirs when carters or coachmen brutally maltreat their horses in the streets, or when boys amuse themselves by torturing dogs and cats, or whatever other creatures have the ill luck to fall into their hands. The horses would appear to be aware of the supineness of their supposed protectors, for they have taken the matter into their own hands, or rather into their own teeth and feet. A carter by dint of hard flogging at his three horses, persuaded them to drag sixteen tons of coal to the foot of the steep hill which leads to the Boulevard Bessieres; but his powers of stimulation utterly failed to induce them to proceed any further—a thick steam rose up from their panting sides and nostrils. "Budge!" said the fiend; and straightway the carter began to lash and swear. A crowd gathered around the ferocious beast, who abandoned the lash and began to bang his stick into their heads and kick them with hob-nailed boots in the sides. The leader of the team took upon himself to protest against this extreme measure. He turned round, seized the carter's arm with his teeth, tossed him to the ground and trampled him with his hoofs; then seized him again with his teeth and tossed him about. The crowd and the police, which had looked approvingly on while he tortured the horses; interfered for the protection of the human monster, who was with great difficulty torn bleeding and mangled from the just equine resentment. He is justly punished; but surely some penalty should be inflicted on the railway company which sent out this heavy load of coal to be drawn up-hill by three horses, when twice the number would have barely sufficed for the work. The carter has paid his penalty; let theirs now be inflicted. Why should not the police be armed with full power to dispatch to the fourriere any vehicle loaded beyond the power of the horses harnessed to it?—Paris Cor. London Telegraph.
