> "The losses on coal cargoes are nearly Waldin, Kinnan & Marvin, Wholesale if not quite as large as in 1901, but on the other hand, not much over one-third as much coal has been shipped. While s vast quantity of iron has been moved, the business has been done at a low rate and does not cut much of a figure in the totals. If I were to sum up the season, I would say that its most striking feature compared with those which have gone before has been the decrease in premiums, rather than any change in the grand total of losses."

Wooden Risks Not Wanted.

The disasters which have attended wooden ships of considerable age the past year will make it still more diffiama strip yearly, and that this amount would naturally have increased even if indirectly bound up in the great trusts. It is claimed that the amount of taxes therein as such risks went begging. It is claimed that the rates on this class of tonnage are as high now as can be paid, and any changes will be in the nature of making owners co-insurers, combined with the reduction in the amount of insurance allowed. It would not be surprising it owners of all wooden ships will be compelled to carry from 121/2 to 25 per cent of their own insurance. In steel ships, no particular change either in rates or policies is anticipated. It is certain that no extension of the period of navigation beyond Dec. 5 will be made.

Many Vessels Without Insurance. The number of lake vessels being of erated without any insurance at all has business. Of the 110 vessels owned by the steel trust only those on which bonds were issued at the time of their construction now carry any insurance. The largest increase in the Gilchrist fleet of wooden boats has also added to the number of uninsured vessels. The three largest fleets on the lakes are run without insurance except to cover bonded indebtedness. It is said that even with the season's total losses they have all on wooden vessels, it is believed that certain. The result will largely depend D., S. S. & A. have worked out his plans. "But Hopkins relates one thing which may not be without interest to the people at the north who are saying so much in praise of Brown, and that was that Brown, despite stories which have been told to the contrary, never lost his courage. It has been put down in history that Brown fell upon his knees and begged for his life. Hopkins tells a different story, and says Brown showed by every act and by every word that he ut-tered that he was perfectly willing to die for the idea which had so completely possessed him. He never quaked under the sting of the halter, according to the story told by the man who built the scaffold, and who was there when Brown 3 was executed. Hopkins' word ought to be as good as any other man's on this point. Has Been Well Taught. "The chief argument in favor of the vertical hand is its legibility. It is a legible hand, but in this connection you should remember that particular care has been exercised in teaching it during the last few years. Like every other new thing it has been taken up with avidity. Superintendents have harped on it, teachers have wrestled with young fingers teaching them to build it up and special instructors have, in many in-stances, taught it in the city schools. It is found, I understand, in the schools of the found, I understand, in the schools of the three principal cities of this county. I doubt not that the superintendents of these schools, individually and collectively, will deny everything I say, and assert their unswerving allegiance to the up and down' hand. They will probably make out a good case, too, with some very plausible arguments. They will cite speed tests, and this and that, until I appear all in the wrong. Bear in I appear all in the wrong. Bear in mind, however, that I am primarily a business man. I have my finger, as it were, on the business pulse, and business necessity, the ultimate tribunal, is finding that vertical handwriting lacks the prime requisities of speed and in-dividuality, to say nothing of beauty. A ou will wake up one of thes mornings and find that the business world is demanding a return to the old slant hand. "I don't want to be dogmatic.
