Senator Spooner has made an apparently authorized statement that there will be no tariff revision during the present session of congress.

There has been nothing further from the Soo this week in regard to the police scandal and as yet there has been no definite word relative to the proposed grand jury.

The University of Illinois has adopted graduate football coaching, and George Huff, the athletic director, will be head coach.

The Detroit Free Press quotes a politician in the lower part of the state as expressing a belief that Judge Steere is preparing to withdraw from the race for a supreme judgeship in favor of Mr. Oren.

Many north country people will find some consolation in the fact that Governor Odell paid $180,000 cash for $200,000 of the bonds of the United States Shipbuilding company.

Three counties in lower Michigan, between Port Huron and Saginaw bay, are practically cut off from the outside world by the terribly severe weather of the past ten days.

Officials of the Milwaukee Brewers' association are of the opinion that the price of beer will be advanced on March 1.

Mayer Maybury has killed what has been left of the boxing game at Detroit by taking a stand against all fights and boxing contests in that city.

The project for a postal package service is being bitterly opposed by the merchants in the country towns and the small cities.

Chancellor Andrews, of the University of Nebraska, is said to be in danger of decapitation. His ability is beyond question and as far as can be learned he has been very successful at the university.

Their population is comparatively thin. The Japs are already established there, and the country looks to them like a promised land.

This is the reason why it seems inevitable that war must come sooner or later. It is existence itself that the Japs are contending for, and there seems to be no way of compromising such a contest.

ANOTHER SESSION ON WATER QUESTION

PROF. KOENIG PRESENTED RESULT OF HIS EXPERIMENTS TO MEETING YESTERDAY.

SUGGESTS PLAN OF FILTRATION

WOULD STOP THE TROUBLE AT FURNACE GROUNDS.

Is Confident That His Scheme Will Prove Practicable — Question of Expense Not Broached.

Professor Koenig, of the Michigan College of Mines, was the center of interest at another meeting yesterday afternoon for the consideration of Marquette's water problem. He presented a plan which, from his experiments, he believes will do away at the furnace grounds with the so-called creosote nuisance. As he sees it, the trouble is all caused by the tar and solid substances that are daily going into the lake. If these can be prevented from reaching the water he does not believe that the distillations in solution will occasion any annoyance or complaint. To get at the tar he proposes filtration. In brief he thinks that the company can do away with the creosote nuisance by filtering the stuff dumped from the stills through the charcoal braze from its kilns. The braze and tar, uniting, give a product that might be available for a fuel. This, in its barest outline, was the remedy presented yesterday.

There was no discussion of the question of costs, this being a matter not considered by Professor Koenig, who concerned himself merely with the chemical aspects of the problem. He gave assurance that he considered his plan practical and that he was confident that it would restore to Marquette permanently pure water. Whether filtration would add enough to the cost of wood alcohol and the other byproducts at the furnace to make the operation of the chemical plant unprofitable he was not prepared to say, nor was anyone else, but Mr. Farrell called attention to the fact that this was a highly important point.

The meeting arrived at nowhere in particular. Professor Koenig had the floor most of the time. He outlined his experiments in a concise and interesting manner. Any and all questions he considered and replied to. Alderman Ward, Mr. Farrell, and Dr. Hudson made supplementary remarks. Mr. Benzenberg was asked to speak, but he said that his data was as yet incomplete and his observations not finished, and he preferred to have nothing positive to say for the time being.

Although nothing definite was accomplished, it is presumed that the furnace people will do some experimenting along the lines suggested by Professor Koenig, with a view to determining how his plan works out in practice, and whether its cost is, from their viewpoint, reasonable or prohibitory.

Water Is Healthful.
As to the healthfulness of the creosote impregnated water Professor Koenig said that it was in no degree directly injurious. However, it was injurious in an indirect manner; i. e., the presence of an unwanted taste in the water was calculated to make people imagine ill and aches, and so in truth was provocative of these very ailments. In substance Professor Koenig said that the smoke from the kilns, the original root of the trouble, was composed of hydrocarbon compounds and water. Among the former the alcohol and the acetic acid can be condensed when the smoke cools. In addition there are gases, some of which escape into the air and some of which are burned. The condensations include two parts, one a clear liquid and the other an oily, tarry substance. The greater part of the tar, something like 1,200 gallons a day, is drained off early in the process and used as fuel at the plant.

When the distilling processes are completed, however, and the stills are ready to be emptied there remains a residue of tar which is being dumped as the plant is now conducted, and which finds its way to the lake. This residue, according to Professor Koenig's theory, is at the root of the trouble. It is partly solid and partly in solution. Part of it is trapped after leaving the stills, and it is estimated that the amount reaching the lake must be considerably under one hundred gallons a day. This tar contains the much discussed creosote.

Professor Koenig's experiments lead him to maintain that the soluble distillations in the water do not make any trouble. After he had removed the tar from the samples of water he had at Houghton the water had a bad taste, but on adding a little additional pure water this taste disappeared, owing to dissemination in the whole quantity of the objectionable distillates. Thus these solubles could go to the lake and long before they reached the intake they would not be apparent to the taste, though they might be in the water to some degree.

Once the tar is in the water it gradually goes into solution, thus the stress laid on the necessity of filtering it out of the still discharge immediately as they are dumped.

Professor Koenig experimented with centrifugal force as a means of freeing the water from the objectionable tar, but differences in specific gravity of the various component parts of the stuff showed that this plan was impracticable. He said that it would have been the cheapest of all the various expedients.

Little Trouble Lately.
The fact that there has been comparatively little complaint lately on account of the presence of creosote in the water was pointed to by Professor Koenig as supporting his theory. He holds that the reason the water has been sweet to the taste is because the ice at the place where the furnace ditch discharges has been catching the heavier parts of the tar waste and preventing it from getting out into the lake, in other words doing just what his process of filtration is expected to do. The ice in the neighborhood of the furnace shows how this process has been going on, but it is said that present immunity will be paid for in the spring, when the break-up comes and all the accumulated stuff gets into the water.

Pressed for an opinion as to whether the trouble could be obviated by the extension of the intake, Professor Koenig said that this was a matter that he had not looked into, not considering that it came within his province, but he seemed to be of the opinion that such an extension would not certainly do away with the nuisance for an indefinite time.

This matter of the advisability and the beneficial results, if any, to be obtained from any reasonable extension of the intake will be treated more at length in the report that will be forthcoming from Mr. Benzenberg, for he is concerning himself more particularly with this phase of the question, and will give it the same thorough investigation which Professor Koenig gave to the chemical problem. Until this latter report is received the data on the situation to the points brought up by the Houghton expert.

Concerning Professor Koenig's deductions, as presented yesterday, the furnace people were reluctant to speak, but it was evident that they were not all accepted without dissent. However, the officials of the Pioneer Iron company displayed every inclination to turn in and see what could be done to put an end to the creosote nuisance for all time, and will doubtless give due attention to the points brought up yesterday.

The meeting was marked by a commendable harmony and an apparent desire on the part of all participating in it to work together to find the easiest and most reasonable way, for all concerned, out of the difficulty.

DEATH OF COL. E. B. HOWARD.
It Was Sudden—Found in His Room Yesterday Morning.
Colonel E. B. Howard, special deputy collector of customs for the Superior district and a well-known Marquette resident, passed away very suddenly some time Wednesday evening, having been found dead in his room yesterday morning. The news of his sudden demise came as a great shock to his many friends and acquaintances in the county, for he had been in excellent health for the past two years. The death of Mr. Howard occurred just two years ago, previous to Colonel Howard's coming to Marquette to accept the deputyship under Mr. Smith. The remains will be interred at Ypsilanti, by the side of those of the late Mrs. Howard. This afternoon at 4:30 o'clock a simple funeral service will be held at the Hotel Clifton. Rev. C. H. Maxson, who was a close friend of the deceased, will officiate.

Colonel Howard was well-known in the Lake Superior county for over twenty years. He came from the lower part of the state. His father, Joshua Howard, was a colonel in the regular army, and fought in no less than three wars. During the war of the rebellion he was a paymaster, and at this time his son, E. B., and E. H. Towar, formerly of Marquette, were employed under him as clerks.

It was late in the seventies when Colonel Howard first came to the upper peninsula. He located at Ontonagon, where he at once was recognized as a valuable citizen, very shortly being elected probate judge. He served one term in this office, and then, in '81, came to Marquette county accepting an important position at Deer Lake, near Ishpeming. His residence in the western part of the county was one of about ten years' duration during which time he built up a wide circle of friends. In '91 he came to Marquette to accept a place in the customs' office under the late Colonel Osborne, and in '92, on the colonel's death, was appointed as his successor, serving for about a year when the Democratic appointee assumed the office.

In 1894, when J. M. Wilkinson was elected state treasurer Colonel Howard accepted an appointment as his deputy, going to Lansing and serving in that capacity throughout Mr. Wilkinson's two terms. On their completion he accepted a position in the auditor general's office and made Lansing his home until he came north to work with Mr. Smith.

Colonel Howard began work as special deputy here on Feb. 1, 1902, starting in the office with Mr. Smith, immediately after that gentleman qualified. Since that time and up to his death he has been continuously at his post of duty. Yesterday morning he did not appear at the usual hour. Mr. Smith felt some anxiety about him, and called up the Normal, thinking that he might have gone out to see his daughter, who had been slightly indisposed. He was not there, however, and on receiving this information Mr. Smith felt that something was amiss. Finding that Colonel Howard had not breakfasted at the hotel, he proceeded to his room, and found him lifeless.

All of Colonel Howard's acquaintances speak in the most respectful manner of his memory. He was a kindly, courteous man, of cheery disposition, and he made a great many warm friends. His ability was first rate, and he served with much credit in the various posts he was called on to fill from time to time. Mr. Smith speaks very highly of his work in the office of the Superior customs' district and with equal warmth of his personal worth.
