A PRISON ASSAULT.

An assault at the Marquette prison yeserday furnished another example of the lass of men that are to be dealt with or murder, with an ugly weapon fashioned by breaking one blade of a pair of eight-inch shears, and probably would have killed him had not the point of the improvised dagger been turned by striking one of Dussold's ribs. As it was the man was severely cut and a second convict who came to his assistance was also injured. The convict Dussold has been an ordery and industrious man in the prison; Ogle an ugly and truculent brute. The one had charge of keeping the machines of the overall shop in order; the other was a machine operator. The trouble between them apparently arose out of the fact that Ogle offended by purposely putting his machine out of order to avoid work, and Dussold frankly explained the cause of the machine being laid up. Therefore Ogle laid for Dussold, and that he didn't "get" him was a fortunate Marquette,

The Colusa-Leonard shaft is 800 feet deep and has cut several fine stringers of copper ore, one especially about six feet wide containing commercial ore. It is probable that drifting on this vein will open shipping ore and a large body.

Amazon-Butte

The Amazon-Butte Copper company was several hundred acres of mineral ground south of the Pittsburg & Montana mines, developed by shaft and crosscuts at a depth of 450 feet. The Amazen-Butte continued its exploration work after financial troubles came and incurred a considerable indebtedness by the time the property was finally closed but the stockholders got together and made the stock assessable. Three assessments of four and three cents were made and all paid, and the debts of the company liquidated and the company put in good shape. The treasury has a large block of stock. The Amazon-Butte has one of the best showings among the new companies, and considerable high grade cre was shipped from several shallow shafts by leasers.

Shipments of some 750 tons of rock have gone to the mill for a test run, which will be made today, and the report of the results obtained is expected tonight or tomorrow morning. There is no reason to believe that these results will be anything but highly satisfactory. The selling today was started by Gay & Sturgis, and some stop orders were soon uncovered, which caused still further weakness. The traders took advantage of this temporary weakness and began hammering it in an effort to get some cheap stock. There was very good buying at the low levels.
