The publication of the address in this form is a tribute to the interest shown by Mr. White, both as a citizen and a regent, in the growth and support of the university. His services were ever at its command, and his material gifts to it were not inconsiderable. Mr. Barbour's address is an effective retelling of the story with which people in this part of the state are so familiar, and its publication in the form it is put out makes it an interesting and effective memorial to the man in whose honor it was prepared.
