

DEATH COMES TO EDW. H. HARRIMAN

After a Fight Which Has Ranked for Grit With His Remarkable Financial Struggles, He Passes Away at Tower Hill.

The Son of an Episcopalian Rector in Humble Circumstances, He Dies a Multi-Millionaire and the Acknowledged Greatest Organizer the Railroad World Has Ever Known—End Is Peaceful and to the Last His Brilliant Mind Retains Its Integrity.

Arden, N. Y., Sept. 9.—The greatest organizer the railroad world has ever known met the only lasting defeat of his life today at the hands of death.

News of the demise of Edw. H. Harriman was given to the world as 3:35 o'clock, when Mr. Harriman's sister said tonight that the end came at 1:30.

Mr. Harriman died peacefully. To the end his brilliant mind retained its integrity. After his relapse on Sunday, Sept. 6, he sank slowly and steadily.

The family, with Dr. Lyle, Robert Gerry, Mr. Harriman's son-in-law; Orlando Harriman, a brother, and the nurses, formed the group at the bedside. No spiritual adviser was present.

The secret maintained at the Harriman residence was unbroken to the very end. The news of the death was conveyed to New York before it came to Arden.

Dr. Lyle has issued no statement concerning the illness or the cause of death, but four persons have stated that there was no operation.

Funeral to Occur Sunday. Mr. Harriman's brother Orlando said that Mr. Harriman would be buried in the family plot at St. John's Episcopal church at Arden.

Judge R. S. Lovett, chief counsel of the Union Pacific and Southern Pacific, did not reach Tower Hill in time for a last farewell to his chief.

Dr. Lyle issued a statement this morning that his patient's condition was unchanged. But this afternoon, his patient was dead.

A Sketch of the Financier's Career. New York, Sept. 8.—From early manhood a commanding figure in Wall street activity, E. H. Harriman in 1897 gained a foothold which raised him to a high position among the half dozen financial giants of the age.

Mr. Harriman's most spectacular performance was when he struggled with the Morgan and Hill interests for the control of the Northern Pacific.

share. At the "show down," Harriman produced $78,000,000 worth of stock, out of a total of $155,000,000.

Mr. Harriman began railroading in 1882, when he was elected a director of the Illinois Central.

The deceased financier was born at Hempstead, L. I., Feb. 25, 1848, and was the son of an Episcopalian rector in humble circumstances.

Outside of business, Harriman cared for little but his family and a single hobby—the building of a great estate. The metamorphosis of his place at Arden from a rocky forest into a king's park, with a residence at the top of its crest, is well known.

WALL STREET NEITHER SHOCKED NOR ALARMED It Has Been Recognized as a Question of Only a Short Time When Harriman Would Retire, and It Is Assumed That Undoubtedly Ample Preparations Have Been Made for His Death.

New York, Sept. 9.—In connection with the consideration of what affect E. H. Harriman's death will have on the financial world, it was pointed out this evening that it had been recognized as a question of only a short time when Harriman would have to relinquish the active direction of his great railroad fabric.

Wall street consequently was neither shocked nor alarmed by the news of the death of the financier. The news of universal personal sorrow. The financiers went home about the usual hour, and there was no conference or concerted action.

Estimate Is Worth Many Millions. Estimates of Harriman's wealth vary from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.

WORLD WILL MISS HIM. Harriman a Wonderful Genius, Declares President Harahan.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 9.—President Harahan, of the Illinois Central, tonight said: "E. H. Harriman's word was as good as his bond.

Conspicuous in Washington. Washington, Sept. 9.—Figuring in litigation in congressional action, interstate commerce commission proceedings and in the administrative details of the treasury department, E. H. Harriman's interests were conspicuous in Washington; but the only largely important case pending between the government and the Harriman interests is the suit against the Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and other railroads.

London Takes Optimistic View. London, Friday, Sept. 10.—E. H. Harriman's death is the leading news feature in the London newspapers.

HIGGINS ON STAND IN HIS OWN BEHALF

WAS PLAINLY NERVOUS UNDER DISTRICT ATTORNEY'S GRILLING CROSS-EXAMINATION.

STRONG POINT FOR DEFENSE

Mrs. Julia Lane Tells of Seeing Two Men Running Away from Postoffice—Testimony Not Yet Closed.

The trial of Frank Higgins, charged with embezzlement of Sault Ste. Marie postoffice funds, which was started in federal court Wednesday, continued throughout yesterday and there is still testimony to be offered. The defense has been completed and the government is now introducing rebuttal testimony.

Higgins was on the witness stand in his own behalf during the entire forenoon and a part of the afternoon. The line of cross-examination adopted by the government, in which the books of the postoffice played a prominent part, seemed to be a surprise to the defendant, who was plainly nervous under fire and on one or two occasions lost his temper.

In the direct examination as brought out by his attorney, H. M. Oren, Higgins told little that had not already been put in evidence by other witnesses. He gave a detailed account of the happenings on the night of the alleged robbery, telling practically the same story that he had told to the police officers and others many times before.

In opening the cross-examination of Higgins, the district attorney began with something apparently a good way from the case by asking the witness if he was in the habit of receiving money order cash from other offices, accompanied by statements of the amounts remitted and in what monetary denominations.

Higgins replied that he was and that these statements were usually kept in a drawer near the money order desk. He Mr. Covell's next question as to whether the statements received with remittances on Sunday, Dec. 31, the day of the alleged robbery, had been placed in that drawer, Higgins replied that he did not know, though he presumed they had been, if any were received.

Time Clock Record.

Mr. Covell's next questions elicited the information that the postoffice employees were supposed to ring in and out on the time clock, when they went to work and when they left the office. The postoffice time record and the clock tape were introduced to show that Higgins had rung in and out of the office that Sunday forenoon, again in the afternoon, and had rung in at 7:13 in the evening, but that on no other Sunday for two months preceding did the clock show any record of his having been in the office. The witness claimed that he often worked in the postoffice Sundays and Sunday evenings, and expressed the opinion that the time record had been falsified since he had had access to it. In this connection, the court called the witness to order for making assertions that the books had been tampered with.

Further questioning brought out that the pay roll, which Higgins claims to have been making out when the two men rapped at the rear door, amounted to about $900, which was payable out of the postal funds. The weekly balance sheet shows that there was at least $1,200 in the postoffice in that fund, and that it was unnecessary to have had the money order cash on the desk for that purpose, and that it was illegal to pay salaries out of the money order fund, anyway.

Higgins testified that the safe was between the desk at which he was working and the front window of the postoffice and projected out from the wall at least as far as the desk, if not a little farther, and that the safe was about six feet high. The point of these questions was to show that it would be difficult, if not impossible, to see the money on Higgins' desk from the street, as had been testified by Agnes Muron the day before.

The witness, however, declared that he knew the money on the desk could be plainly seen from the street.

Higgins was then asked to retell his experience with the men who rapped at the back door and subsequently overpowered him and presumably took the mail. The district attorney dwelt particularly on Higgins' alleged carelessness in not locking all the doors between the men and the money and in handing out several letters to the men without ascertaining beforehand whether they were being delivered to the right parties.

Higgins testified that it was customary to let foreigners, who could not speak English plainly, sort over a certain bunch of letters and pick out their own mail. Furthermore, he said it was not an unusual occurrence to give mail to persons at the back door after hours, even when there was money outside the safe in the front part of the office. He said that to the best of his recollection, the men did not return the letters he handed them, though they said the letters were not for them. Court was adjourned until after dinner at this point.

After the noon hour, Mr. Covell continued the cross-examination of Higgins relative to having called in Dr. McDonald at the hospital. Higgins stated that he was worried about his condition and that he had asked for his family physician, Dr. Webster, who came while the witness was asleep and consequently made no examination. Noting Dr. McDonald in the hospital one day, Higgins tried him to make an examination, which was done. Higgins said that he did not know that Dr. Dickinson, the attending physician, had ever said he (Higgins) was faking illness, but that, on the contrary, the doctor had advised him to stay in the hospital two weeks, and subsequently to keep quiet and not to talk to many people.

In Mr. Oren's re-examination, Higgins said Dr. Dickinson was not his family physician and that he had not been paid for his services. The court refused to allow the witness to tell why payment had not been made. Higgins explained the presence of the money order funds on the desk by saying that it was the custom to keep only large bills in the postal fund box, which was small, and that the money order funds were used in making change. This was nearly always done in making out the pay roll, he said. Higgins stated that Inspectors Fox and Cookson had visited him at home on Dec. 22 when they put him through a four-hour examination. Before they went away he signed a statement of what had happened him, but said he was tired out when he signed it and that it contained some statements that were not quite correct.

Told Clear Story.

The last witness called by the defense proved to be Higgins' best witness. She was Mrs. Julia Lane, an elderly lady with a fine, honest face, who told of passing the postoffice between 8 and 8:30 on the night of Dec. 31. When a short distance east of the building, she saw two men run out from near the postoffice, cross the street toward her, whom they apparently did not see until right beside her, and after passing an instant, they ran on down the street. On the way across the street, she heard the taller one say, "Didn't we do that sick? That was the easiest job I ever did." As they passed upon seeing her, she caught a glimpse of the tall man's face and noticed the shorter man's general appearance. Her descriptions of the men tallied exactly with Higgins' description of his assailants.

Mr. Covell in cross-examination was unable to shake any detail of Mrs. Lane's direct testimony. She further stated that upon hearing about the postoffice robbery the next morning, she had called at breakfast, "These men that I saw last night were the robbers."

This closed the defense and the government entered upon rebuttal testimony. Up to adjournment last night, Mr. Covell had made no effort to contradict Mrs. Lane's testimony, but introduced a number of witnesses to refute Miss Muron's statement that she saw Higgins at the desk with money in front of him a short time before the alleged robbery. Chief of Police Schwartz, Police Captain Coulter, Officer Roberts and Inspector Cookson all testified that one could not see the desk from the street window with the safe doors open at right angles to its front as they were found after the alleged robbery. Higgins, however, and also Miss Muron, say that the safe doors were wide open and parallel with the front of the safe, in which case a part of the desk would have been visible from the street. Inspector Fox declared that Miss Muron had identified a man in jail as the person who was standing in front of the postoffice early Sunday evening and also Saturday evening. Higgins stated positively that this fellow was not one of his assailants.

Miss Muron has testified that she was not sure as to the identity of the man in jail.

Angus McDougall, who is now assistant postmaster at the Seo, and was a clerk in the office at the time of the Higgins affair, stated that he and Inspector Cookson had been unable to find any of the remittance letters, which were sent in with remittances from the smaller offices. These letters were kept in a certain drawer in the money order department. Higgins had answered in his cross-examination that he did not know as to the letters being in the drawer Sunday night, but supposed they were. The remittance totals had been properly entered in the cash book, though the letters were missing.

Inspector Fox was the last witness called yesterday but he told only what has already been stated. The government expects to call two more witnesses in rebuttal this morning, and the case will not be apt to go to the jury before noon and perhaps later.
