MARVELS OF HYPNOTISM.

Experiments Which Are Baffling to the Ordinary Comprehension.

The end I have ever held before my eyes, then, and which I hope I have never lost from view, is this: To study the hypnotic phenomena according to a strictly scientific method and for this purpose to employ processes purely physical and which can always be compared with one another, so that the results obtained by me may be rigorously tested by all observers who shall use the same processes under the same conditions. Take one example from among a thousand. I present to a woman patient in the hypnotic state a blank leaf of paper and say to her: "Here is my portrait; what do you think of it? Is it a good likeness?" After a moment's hesitation she answers: "Yes, indeed, your photograph; will you give it to me?" To impress deeply in the mind of the subject this imaginary portrait I point with my finger toward one of the four sides of the square leaf of paper, and tell her that my profile looks in that direction; I describe my clothing. The image being now fixed in her mind I take that leaf of paper and mix it with a score of other leaves precisely like it. I then hand the whole pack to the patient, bidding her go over them and let me know whether she finds among these any thing she has seen before. She begins to look at the leaves one after another, and as soon as her eyes fall upon the one first shown to her (I had made upon it a mark that she could not discern) forthwith she exclaims: "Look, your portrait!" What is more curious still, if I turn the leaf upside down, as soon as her eyes rest upon it she turns it over, saying that my photograph is on the reverse. I then convey to her the order that she shall continue to see the portrait on the blank paper even after the hypnosis has passed. Then I awaken her and again hand to her the pack of papers, requesting her to look over them. She handles them just as before when she was hypnotized, and utters the same exclamation: "Look, your portrait!" If now I tell her that she may retire, she returns to her dormitory, and her first care will be to show to her companions the photograph I have given her. Of course, her companions, not having received the suggestion, will see only a blank leaf of paper without any trace whatever of a portrait, and will laugh at our subject and treat her as a visionary. Furthermore, this suggestion, this hallucination, will, if I wish, continue several days; all I have to do is to express the wish to the patient before awakening her.

The foregoing experiment has been made hundreds of times by me and by others, and the fact can easily be substantiated; their objectivity is as complete as could be wished in researches of this kind. Hypnotism is directly amenable to our means of investigation, and must needs be an integral part of the known domain of science; to that goal our efforts ought to be directed.—Dr. J. M. Charcot, in Forum.

A BIG SNAKE STORY.

How the Cribo of St. Lucia Swallows Serpents Larger Than Itself.

No part of the West Indies is so rich in snake stories as St. Lucia. Froude tells how this fer de lance hunts his human prey by creeping along a garden path until the guileless tourist falls foul of him, when in the flash of the eye the fierce beast has stabbed him with fangs that never do less than kill. Coleridge, a nephew of the poet, who visited the island in 1825, gives the gentle reader a shudder by saying that not even on horseback is the inquisitive traveler safe from a savage monster known as the wood slave, whose bite is as deadly as that of Froude's horror and whose instincts are no less desperate. Neither of these gentlemen had seen any snake in St. Lucia; no more have I. But it will never do to leave the island without something on this subject more authoritative than the yarn of an engineer sergeant.

I therefore take pleasure in assuring prospective travelers to this place that in 1844 St. Lucia was pronounced to be "infested by countless reptiles," and this from the pen of one who had resided thirteen years in the place, Mr. Breen. But his snake story differs materially from those of both Froude and Coleridge in that he appears to know neither fer de lance nor wood slave, but tells of a ubiquitous "yellow serpent," whose bite, however, may be effectually cured if promptly attended to, and from what I learned in Castries I am disposed to back the statement of the thirteen-year resident as against those of the two gentlemen first quoted, though the one be a historian and the other the son of a Bishop. This yellow serpent, however, has an enemy called the cribo, who is both aggressive and powerful, and attacks his yellowship at sight and without provocation. Mr. Breen says that the yellow serpent in these combats usually comes off second best, and that the cribo is so clever that when he is through with the fight he rolls about on the leaves of a plant called pied poule, which operation not only counteracts any evil effects from the other's bite, but acts as a tonic for more fight of the same kind, so that ultimately the cribo is sure to gain the victory, which he signalizes by swallowing his victim whole, commencing with the head.

Sometimes the cribo is called upon to swallow an adversary longer and bigger than himself, an operation that might discourage one less fruitful in resources. The work is accomplished in this wise: The cribo swallows as much as the cubic contents of his skin permits, whereupon he goes to sleep until time nerves him for a second effort. He then sucks in what is needful to keep himself distended, and thereupon once more seeks rest and sleep—repeating these operations until the apparently-impossible task is accomplished—namely: swallowing more than himself.—Leeds (Eng.) Mercury.

Referring to the return from their honeymoon of a couple living in the vicinity, a West Grove, Pa., paper says they were given a serenade that was "hilarious if not unbecoming. Much older was drunk and damage done."

HOUSEHOLD BREVITIES.

—To make genuine cream pies, take three cups of rich cream and sweeten to taste; one small tablespoonful of flour, and a little salt and nutmeg. Bake it without an upper crust.

—The upper part of a fine, white cotton stocking is excellent for making a bath-bag. Fill this with about equal parts of barley and bran. Throw it into the bath and allow it to remain until the water feels soft and smooth to the touch. It has a fine effect upon the skin.

—An antiseptic is a substance which prevents decay in material that is liable to undergo decomposition. Sugar, salt, vinegar, alcohol, smoke, heat and cold are familiar domestic examples; while in surgery we have carbolic acid, corrosive sublimate, boracic acid and various other substances in common use.—The Housekeeper.

—One reason, and that a chief one, why these faultfinders are so dainty, is that they continually overeat; nothing "tastes good" to their jaded palates. If they would take a crust of bread and a bit of cheese for lunch, and spend the day mountain-climbing, they would be glad of the supper considered so lacking; the situation would at once improve.

—German Potato Balls.—Take one pint of mashed potatoes and add to them, while hot, an ounce of butter, two tablespoonfuls of cream, salt, pepper and a teaspoonful of onion-juice; add sufficient flour, about three tablespoonfuls, to hold the potatoes together. Form them into balls, dip them in beaten egg, drop them at once in smoking-hot fat, drain and serve.—Troy Times.

—In regard to the care of canary birds, the food should consist of canary and rape seed mixed with a little green food now and then and also pieces of sweet apple. Hard-boiled eggs are good for them, and a piece of cuttle fish should always be kept in the cage. Keep the perches and cage clean and give plenty of fresh water for drinking and bathing. Gravel paper is nice for the bottom of the cage.—N. Y. World.

—Risen Cake.—Take three pounds of flour, one and a-half pounds of loaf sugar, a teaspoonful of cloves, one of ginger, one of mace, all finely powdered. Mix in four tablespoonfuls of good yeast and twelve eggs. Stir all together, and if not too stiff add a little milk. Set to rise. When light knead in a pound of butter; have ready two pounds of stoned raisins, mix in the cake, pour in a mold, set in the oven and bake. When done let stand in the pan until thoroughly cold.

THE NEW EDUCATION.

A Misconception That Has Done a World of Harm in the Past.

There is a grave misconception in the minds of many persons concerning the "new education." It is supposed by some that the "new education" only gives boys such things as they like to learn. Their diet, according to this theory, should be plum-cake and jam, made spongy to the palate and easy to masticate, and it has been supposed that oral teaching and object lessons were resorted to because it was an easy way to get knowledge into the mind of the child. This misconception has done a world of harm in the past; it is not likely to do so much in the future, because now the principles of the "new education" are more clearly understood. Oral teaching and object lessons are given not because knowledge is thus more easily gained, but because the mode of obtaining that knowledge is more in accordance with nature's system. There are many persons in the school-room who have untrained judgments, but who desire to employ the new modes of teaching. They often require no work from the pupil, or enforce no discipline, and give no punishments. Such persons will fail, because they are ignorant. There is work before the pupil; there is work before him all the way from his infancy to old age. The best school-rooms are those that have the most work done; but that work should be done wisely and easily, with little friction and with the least outlay of mental power; there is such a thing as educational machinery. Many teachers are inventive, and discover methods of teaching which, like machinery in the physical world, reach ends with the least outlay of power. This misconception of the "new education" is not so likely to do harm as it once did; still it is worth while to call attention to it. The time has passed when any thing new passes current under the name "new education." The people, as well as teachers, are beginning to realize that there are principles with practices based upon them.—School Journal.

THE INDIVIDUAL LIFE.

Its Principle Is Something Irrational, Inexplicable and Mysterious.

All origins are secret; the principle of every individual or collective life is a mystery—that is to say, something irrational, inexplicable, not to be defined. We may even go farther and say—every individuality is an insoluble enigma, and no beginning explains it. In fact, all that has become may be explained retrospectively, but the beginning of any thing whatever did not become. It represents always the status quo, the initial miracle, the act of creation; for it is the consequence of nothing else, it simply appears among anterior things which make a milieu, an occasion, a surrounding for it, but which are witnesses of its appearance without understanding whence it comes. Perhaps also there are no true individuals, and, if so, no beginning but one only, the primordial impulse, the first movement. All men on this hypothesis would be but man in two sexes; man again might be reduced to the animal, the animal to the plant, and the only individuality left would be a living nature, reduced to a living matter, to the hylozoism of Thales. However, even upon this hypothesis, if there were but one absolute beginning, relative beginnings would still remain to us as multiple symbols of the absolute. Every life, called individual for convenience sake and by analogy, would represent in miniature the history of the world, and would be to the eye of the philosopher a microscopic compendium of it.—Henri Frederic Amiel.

REST FOR THE NERVES.

The Importance of Occasional Absolute Cessation of Work.
As there are so many degrees of nervous exhaustion, so are there many methods of restoration. What would be pleasant exercise to one might prove laborious exertion to another, and what would be soothing to one might be irritating to another. In all cases, however, complete nerve rest implies the maintenance of agreeable sensation and the avoidance of nervous agitation. It may not be possible to obtain such absolute rest as is here indicated, but the aim of treatment is to secure as near an approach to it as can be attained by legitimate means. No means are used which might injure the general health.
The fact that women are more liable than men to the severer forms of nervous exhaustion is one reason why the cases quoted are chiefly those of women.
Another reason is that in men it is rarely possible to study this stage of the disease uncomplicated by the effects of alcoholic indulgence. Most men who find themselves becoming victims of nervousness endeavor to escape the worries of life by taking refuge in drink, so that they usually bring upon themselves other diseases of alcoholic origin.
In women this was not formerly the habit, but there is reason to believe that the late increase of inebriety among them is largely due to the spread of nervous exhaustion. On the other hand, there are many cases in both sexes where alcoholic indulgence has undoubtedly been the chief cause of the ailment. Although the most severe forms of this disease have alone been discussed, it must not be supposed that milder forms do not also require special nerve rest. This can not be secured without more or less change being made in the ordinary mode of life. Nervous agitation is the chief cause of nervous exhaustion. It is almost impossible even for a healthy man to avoid a certain amount of agitation in connection with his affairs, while for the nervous man it is absolutely impossible. For the latter, therefore, a frequent holiday is essential.
The way of spending such a holiday is a matter of urgent importance. Many nervous sufferers return home worse than when they left. They climb mountains in Switzerland when they ought to be loitering on the seashore or lounging on the deck of an ocean steamer. They rise early "to make the best of to-day" when they had better lie several hours longer to fix the benefits of yesterday. Like the unskilled rider, who dismounts for relief, they are frequently driven to bed to recover from their holiday exertions. The amount of exercise must be regulated by its effect on head or spine. Mere muscular fatigue may be overcome by regular walking, but nervous fatigue must be entirely avoided. If the patient can not take sufficient exercise to sustain his appetite and digestion, he had better undergo an hour's massage daily.
And when he has once gained the power of walking from five to ten miles a day without fatigue of head or spine, he ought, by constant practice, to endeavor to retain it. There is no better preventive of nervous exhaustion than regular, unhurried, muscular exercise.
If we could moderate our hurry, lessen our worry and increase our open-air exercise, a large portion of nervous diseases would be abolished. For those who can not get a sufficient holiday, the best substitute is an occasional day in bed. Many whose nerves are constantly strained in their daily vocation have discovered this for themselves. A Spanish merchant in Barcelona told his medical man that he always went to bed for two or three days whenever he could be spared from his business, and he laughed at those who spent their holidays on toilsome mountains. One of the hardest-worked women in England, who has for many years conducted a large wholesale business, retains excellent nerves at an advanced age, owing, it is believed, to her habit of taking one day a week in bed. If we can not avoid frequent agitation, we ought, if possible, to give the nervous system time to recover itself between the shocks. Even an hour's seclusion after a good lunch will deprive a hurried, anxious day of much of its injury. The nerves can often be overcome by stratagem when they refuse to be controlled by strength of will.—American Analyst.

CALINO'S ADVENTURE.

A Practical Humorist Courts the Wrong Man's Confidence.
Monsieur Calino is a practical humorist. Not long since he was caught in a shower without an umbrella. He sought refuge under the doorway of the Opera House. It was six o'clock, and he had an appointment with a friend at the Cafe de Paris at that very hour. What will he do? The rain was falling in torrents. Just at this crisis a gentleman with a large umbrella passes. Calino has a Napoleonic mind.
He rushed over to the stranger, and taking him confidentially by the arm walked along with him, under his umbrella, saying:
"I'm glad I've met you. I've been looking for you for three weeks, old chum, to tell you about my affair with Cleomantina."
Calino kept on talking to the man whom he had never seen, telling a trumped-up story about some unknown Cleomantina, not allowing the stranger to get in a word, until they had reached the Cafe de Paris.
Then Calino said:
"I beg ten thousand pardons. I mistook you for a friend. Don't give me away. Thanks," and he darted into the cafe. One of his friends observed that Calino's cravat was in disorder, whereupon it was discovered that his diamond pin, likewise his watch and purse were missing.
He had been confidential to one of the most expert pickpockets in Paris.—Tex-
