

TO HALT PLAN FOR PAVING

Property Owners Will File Objections on Tuesday in Council

CLAIM ASSESSMENT IS AN INJUSTICE

Owners on Oak, Sarah and Norris Streets do Not Desire to Contribute Toward Langley and Sinclair Streets

Street improvements contemplated for this season by the council on Langley and Sinclair streets may be held up by property owners on Oak, Sarah and Norris streets, who next Tuesday evening will file strenuous objections against the manner of assessing for street paving work.

The remonstrances to be filed bear the signatures of nearly 70 property owners.

Those of us owning property not abutting on these streets do not consider that our property has been benefited by the proposed improvement, and therefore we do not think that we should be assessed on account of it.

"We object to the assessment because the assessors have levied the same amount of tax on all property in the same relative position, irrespective of its value and irrespective of its location, and we think that is unfair and unjust."

Lady Palmist Gets Police "23" Order

The State and Local Laws Found To Interfere With Conduct of Much Business in Escanaba

Escanaba people who have doubts as to their future; Who are perplexed over serious affairs of the heart, or,

Those who were sufficiently gullible to trust their business secrets to one who claims to be all-wise and sufficient unto the day, must go unenlightened.

Mme. Levette, who has held forth in Escanaba for the past ten days, gathering in the shakels of the gullible hordes who believed her vaunted supernatural powers, has felt the strong arm of the law.

A steady stream of patrons flocking to the madame's apartments yesterday was interrupted for a few minutes while Chief of Police Rowe held a secret but pointed conference with the seeress. Abruptly prying the athermal mind of the seeress loose from the affairs of other people, the chief of police, astounded the woulbe soothsayer with the information that he, too, was of her cult.

Passing into a trance, the chief announced that he could see plainly that Mme. Levette was about to go on a journey. In fact, saw the chief in his prophecy, she was about to move suddenly and abruptly.

Suddenly coming back to plain and unvarnished fact, Chief Rowe asserted that he was as much of a soothsayer as Mme. Levette and surpassed even her, in that his prophecies were never known to fall.

This morning Mme. Levette took the hint.

Chief Rowe learned yesterday that clairvoyancy and palmreading were prohibited both by city ordinance, and state laws. Hence his trance.

The Missions to Foreign Lands.

69. The Danes did not attack Christianity. The Norse invasions which harassed Ireland during more than two centuries, did no lasting or vital harm either to the national or spiritual development of the people. From a political standpoint, they caused disturbances which were scarcely more than added incidents to the general warfare of the times. From a religious standpoint, the harm they did was only material. When churches and monasteries were raided, the attack was made in search of booty, and not against Christianity; and, if monks and nuns were carried off as prisoners, they only gained a new field for their moral energies. We find them exerting their Christian influence by preaching the gospel among the pirates who carried them away.

70. Ireland the Bridge Over the Dark Ages. Along with the teaching of the Gospels, which were read in Latin, the study of the ancient poets and historians of Rome, and even Greece, was not neglected. Ireland had received the learning and traditions of Rome while Rome was still mighty. The Roman Empire fell, swallowed up by the tide of the northern savages. Gaul was overrun by the Franks; Spain and Italy by the Lombards, Goths, and Vandals; Britain by Angles, Saxons and Danes; while Picts and Norsemen devastated the Scottish lowlands; Austria was swept by Asiatic nomads, like the Huns and Magyars; Russia and Germany, with the Scandinavian lands, were still pagan. Thus all Europe was submerged under a deluge of heathendom. Ireland was the one exception, the ark of safety for the old wisdom and beauty of classical days. It was the bridge over the Dark Ages, and as soon as the flood of heathen invasion ebbed, light and hope crossed the bridge, and were first carried by Irish teachers and preachers to all the new-formed nations of Europe, the great pagan tribes that were to be transformed into the peoples of the modern world.

71. Ireland's Pagan History Preserved Almost Complete. At this point, another view of Ireland's significance should be held in mind. We know practically nothing of the original life of the great pagan peoples who destroyed the Roman Empire. Franks, Vandals, Angles, Lombards, and the rest are shrouded in complete darkness, until they are illuminated by the fires of devastation which they kindled through the provinces of Rome.

Outside Greece and Italy, we have very few written records for the study of early European life in any country but Ireland. There the bards and heralds had woven a durable fabric of verse in every period of their ancient history, recording not only events, but also the whole substance and tenor of their lives, with their loves and hates, their hopes and fears, their ambitions and their longings. This web of verse still lived in the hearts and on the lips of the bards when Patrick went to Ireland and learned the Irish tongue. In this tongue he himself composed verses after the ancient Irish model. Writing was brought by Patrick, or even earlier. When it came, the ancient verse records were full of life, and so were written down and preserved. Many of them were translated into Latin at the same time, as the historical records and chronicles kept by the churches and schools were written in Latin. Thus the ancient traditional literature of Ireland has been transmitted to the modern world virtually intact, embodying the greater part of what we know of the ancient peoples of northern Europe.

72. Missionary Work on the Continent. The work of converting the pagans of northwestern Europe to Christianity was carried on chiefly by Irish missionaries, aided by men of continental birth, who had received their religious and literary training in Ireland. Columba and his associates brought Christianity, learning, and art to Scotland, and later to the pagan Angles and Saxons of the north of England. We shall now briefly trace the work of Irish missionaries on the continent of Europe, in the centuries following the time of Saint Columba.

The best known of the continental missionaries was Columbanus, a Leinsterman, born in 543. From the school of Bangor, in the north of Ireland, Columbanus went to Europe, where he worked for about twenty years, and founded the two monasteries of Luxeuil and Fontaines. He was expelled from Burgundy for denouncing the vices of King Theodoric, and later he incurred the displeasure of the reigning queen of the Franks, who ordered him to be sent been devastated by the Franks and Goths. He and his disciples ascended the river toward Switzerland. When they reached Lake Constance, Callus, one of the pupils of Columbanus, decided to remain there, and soon afterward, in 612, laid the foundation of the monastery of Saint Gall. From Gallus the Swiss nation of Saint Gall takes its name.

Columbanus continued his pilgrimage southward across the Alps in Italy. There he received a grant of land in the territory between Milan and Genoa, on which he founded the monastery of Bobbio. Columbanus was a man of great learning, and found time to write many books, including a "Monastic Rule" and many learned letters. He passed the closing days of his life as a hermit, in the mountains of Italy.

Fursa, the apostle of Belgium; Fridolin, who taught on the Rhine; Catusus of Lismore, who became bishop of Tarentum in the south of Italy and Kilian, the teacher of Franconia, show how widely dispersed and now influential were these Irish missions. Even more eminent was Virgil, the founder of the great religious settlement at Salzburg in Austria. He was famed for his knowledge of mathematics and science, and was the first among moderns to teach that the earth was round and went round the sun. Virgil died in 785. Hardly less celebrated was Democid of Cologne, who died in 812.

It is interesting to note how these missionaries traveled. They went in companies, taking with them their books, the beautiful manuscripts for which Ireland was so justly famed. They carried no weapons more formidable than their staves, and had neither water nor drinking-bottles. They used their staves for writing-tables of the Romans, as well as prepared skins or parchments. Excelling in religious and classical learning, they were also skilled in music, painting, and carving. They not only visited already existing monasteries, but often explored lands where Christianity had never been heard of, such as Poland, Bulgaria, Russia, and Iceland. Where they found a region which pleased them, they made a settlement and worked among the people.

74. Johannes Scotus Erigena, 800-875. The famous universities of Oxford, Paris, and Pavia counted among the great spirits which inspired their being and laid the foundations of their classical learning men who were worthy pupils of the Irish schools of Devenish, Darrow, Bangor, and Moville. The most celebrated of these was Johannes Scotus Erigena, that is, "John the Scot, born in Erin," the close friend of Charles the Bald, king of France.

74. Marianus Scotus. One of the most characteristic Irish religious settlements on the continent was at Ratibon, or Regenburg, in Bavaria. Its monastery was dedicated to Saint James, and from it teachers went forth to found many other "Scottic" that is, Irish, monasteries. The story of Marianus Scotus is closely connected with this school; and although this famous scholar came somewhat later than the epoch we have been describing, living at the end of the eleventh century his life and work give us an insight into the character and methods of the earlier missionaries.

"This holy man wrote from beginning to end with his own hand the Old and New Testaments, with explanatory comments on the same books, and that not once or twice, but over and over again, with a view to the eternal reward, all the while clad in sorry garb, living on slender diet, attended and aided by his brethren, both in the upper and lower monasteries, who prepared the parchments for his use; besides, he also wrote many smaller books and manuals, spalters for distressed widows and poor clerics in the same city toward the health of his soul, without any prospect of earthly gain." Furthermore, through the grace of God, many congregations of the monastic order, which, in faith and charity and imitation of the blessed Marianus, are derived from the aforesaid Ireland, and inhabit Bavaria and Franconia, are sustained by the writings of the blessed Marianus."

76. Enthusiasm for Irish Teaching. It is easy to understand that all this missionary zeal flowed from a sincere and abundant culture at home. Greek had early been added to Latin, and some of the ancient Irish scholars were even familiar with Hebrew. The fame of these schools had gone abroad, and students flocked to Ireland from all the neighboring countries, and especially from England, coming thence in best loads as a Saxon writer at the received, cared for, and taught free of charge, in the Irish schools. Saint Finnian's school at Clonard in Meath had three thousand pupils, and Bangor in Down had almost as many. Allowing one New Testament to three pupils, a thousand copies would be required for each of these schools, so that scribes had plenty of work. The tide of learning also flowed outward from Ireland. Thus a great divine of France, who died in 575 A. D., writes, "What need to speak of Ireland, setting at naught, as it does, the difficulties of the sea, and coming almost in a body to our shores, with its crown of philosophers, the most intelligent of who are subjecting themselves to a voluntary exile."

And Notes for the Realm of Women and Girls

none, cherty for saving the life of the best loved man in our country from a murderer's knife. We all admire you and as admirers, we desire to honor you in some manner. I have been delegated by the other passengers to invite you to sit at a supper to-morrow night as the guest of honor. Necessarily the expression of our admiration for you must be mild, but we are sure that you will feel the spirit of the occasion to be earnest and full-born."

"Really, Senor Lopez," blushed Jerry, "I think I already have received vastly more honor than is due me. However, I am in the hands of my friends, to be done with as they deem fit. But, candidly, I don't think I deserve any such consideration."

"The idea was born in the mind of my daughter," said the merchant, "and there is a saying that a woman never thinks amiss."

"Are all North Americans as modest as you, Capt. Chambers?" asked Senorita Mercedes. A faint smile came to his lips and he moved rather nervously before the steady gaze from her big black eyes.

"Many of us do not have time to be modest."

With an expression bordering almost on gratitude, Senor Lopez departed to frame up preliminary arrangements for the supper of honor.

Senorita Mercedes became intensely interested in Jerry, who, reluctantly complying with her urgent request, related part of the story of his thrilling experiences in Urania. After he had told of Marina Bostos' heroism and sacrifice, she said, with a straightforwardness that half startled him:

"Senorita Bostos must have loved you, my captain—else why should she have sacrificed all to save your life?"

"Senorita Bostos was prompted by her sense of justice and humanity," he floundered.

"She must have loved you, my captain," she persisted.

"She could not have loved me," said he; "she did not know me."

"One does not need to know to love," she said, promptly and decisively. "Do you know there is not a girl in all Urania—and how her sparkling eyes pierced him!—that would not have sacrificed all to have done as Senorita Bostos did? What manner of woman was this? Jerry was stricken speechless for a moment. "Do you not believe what I say?" she added.

"Senorita Lopez," he finally managed to say, clumsily, "must recognize right and justice, and—"

"I should have acted quite as quickly, quite as determinedly as Senorita Bostos acted," she broke in, and there was a strange ring to her voice. He tried to laugh, but her steady, unswerving gaze checked him; he tried to switch to another phase of the general subject, but her mind kept in the old channel doggedly. "My captain does not believe that I should have sacrificed as she sacrificed," she went on, in a tone of injury.

"Such candor, Senorita Lopez," said he, "cannot be doubted."

There was a strange light in her eyes as she turned them to the sea, and he was becoming more and more uncomfortable. To him she was a revelation, the most remarkable girl he had ever met; never before had he seen such frankness, such openness displayed under similar circumstances. He was familiar enough with Spanish blood to make big allowances, but he could not bring himself to understand this daughter of a Croesus.

"How long will you be in Havana?" she asked, after a long, thoughtful silence.

"Only a short time—maybe not more than a few hours," he answered.

"My father has been called to the City of Mexico," said she, "and I am going with him. From there we shall make a tour of the United States. We shall spend two weeks in Havana. Can you not come to Mexico?"

This completely stumped Jerry. "Why," said he, "I intend to leave Havana almost immediately for Vera Cruz, from where I shall move on to the capital."

"Leave Havana immediately!" she exclaimed. "Then, we may conclude to leave on the same vessel. How glorious!"

Jerry Chambers was one of the most unassuming men in the world, but so persistently did Senorita Mercedes force herself upon him that at last he was compelled to believe that she had become desperately infatuated with him. He felt that the infatuation was very shallow—an emotion of a girl whose nature had for its foundation, superstructure and all a romantic spirit. He thought her startling candor could be traced to a father's stern and rigid watchfulness. In fact, she was as much as had told him that she was constantly under her father's eye and that she was fast tiring of it.

On the afternoon of the following day a very strong eastern wind came up and set the old Pranzos to dancing restlessly. By dusk there came distant rumblings of thunder and faint had been prepared for the supper of honor, but much of the spirit of the occasion was lost in the fear that had become almost panic in the heart of every passenger. Although appreciating the peril quite as keenly as the others, Jerry was composed, and his apparent unconcern served as an inspiration to many of the men. At last the 30 or more women became panic-stricken, some falling into the throes of ungovernable hysteria. The men were helpless to curb their fear and excitement. Jerry struggled to the captain of the vessel and put this:

"Are we in great danger? Be frank with me."

"We are," answered the officer, "although she is holding her own as well as any similar boat could under the conditions. This is the worst storm I have ever seen in all my life on the water. If we can keep away from the rocks—and they are plentiful along the coast—she may weather it out all right. At present my whole mind is on escaping two massive rocks, about 30 or 40 feet apart, known as the 'silent sentinels.' Each stands 50 feet out of the water. We cannot be far from them."

"How far are we now from shore?"

"The wind has blown us to within ten miles of it. We are going in nearer every minute," and the captain's face became very grave.

"How far are the 'silent sentinels' from shore?"

"About four miles."

"Good God, captain," exclaimed Jerry, "if we strike them!"

"There'll be hell to pay, sir!" roared the officer. "The women must be kept quiet; they upset my men completely."

For a moment Jerry seemed paralyzed. Finally recovering his wits, he laboriously picked his way back to the dining saloon, where the white-faced passengers were huddled in plunging, reeling groups. His face wore an expression of complacency as he tumbled into their presence.

"Be calm," Jerry urged. "The captain requests that the supper be delayed no longer. The cooks are very impatient and they fear that if the coffee stands much longer it will lose all its strength."

Jerry's purpose in getting the passengers to the table was to make possible a more systematic retreat to deck in case the vessel reached the rocks. The terrible tossing of the old craft had made many of the passengers care little whether they ever saw land again. The fear and excitement had kept many from getting sick. With the exception of but three or four of the women and two of the men, all took seats at the table, though few doubted that they could take a mouthful to eat. Senor Lopez escorted Jerry to the seat of honor, both struggling and plunging into the wall as they picked their way together.

Senor Lopez acted as master of ceremonies, Jerry taking the seat at his right, Senorita Mercedes, pale but staunch, having the one at his left. When the merchant struggled to his feet to announce formally the purpose of the supper, it seemed to Jerry, who had been infinitely more interested in the storm and the fate of the Pranzos than in the honor being shown him, that the old vessel was plunging and twisting and groaning more furiously than at any time before. He did not believe she could stand the terrific strain much longer.

"Uranians let no such thing as a storm at sea deter them from showing honor to whom honor is due," began Senor Lopez, smiling weakly, but his enthusiasm was hopelessly at low ebb. "Capt. Chambers deserves every consideration that we, as Uranians, can show him. He possesses every quality that contributes to the greatness of a man, and his achievements in our beloved land will shine out for ever."

When the Pranzos thundered against the "silent sentinels" every one at the supper of honor was thrown to the floor, many being pitched headlong over the table. Senor Lopez, the only one standing, was hurled against the wall and rendered unconscious, and Jerry Chambers awoke from a moment's insensibility to find himself at the bottom of a heap of four or five persons. On all sides lay the stunned passengers, a few just beginning to realize what had happened. The littered floor was at an angle of almost 45 degrees, the vessel having been driven between the rocks and pitched to a position from which the continued fury and force of the elements could not dislodge her. A great hole had been torn in one of her sides, and the angry waves were faking ripping off the timbers.

Many of the crew had been swept from the deck and pounded to death on the rocks and only a few of those remaining were sufficiently possessed of their faculties to attempt the salvation of passengers and themselves.

When Jerry Chambers, bruised and battered, was trying to extricate himself the captain of the vessel dashed through the saloon commanding every one to go on deck, where he purposed putting as many as possible into the few remaining boats and setting them out at the mercy of the night. Jerry by this time was on his unsteady feet, and he plunged towards the narrow stairway leading to the deck. Before he had scrambled up half a dozen steps he heard a shriek behind him. He turned and saw Senorita Mercedes on her knees at the first step.

"Save father!" she screamed. "He is not dead! Save him!"

Jerry never knew why he returned to the saloon, for his swimming mind was intent only on getting to the deck himself. When he reached the base of the staircase the young woman staggered to her feet and threw her arms around his neck.

"Save father! Save father!" she cried, as Jerry tried to tear himself away from her.

Fads and Fashions

For Women Readers

By Florence Fairbanks
NEW YORK, July 31.—Tae fancy for drapery round the skirts, particularly upon gowns of foulard or mousseline, is growing every day and while the length of line is preserved it is nevertheless discretely hidden beneath subtle draperies and graceful folds of material. In clinging foulard the panniers are worked out quite openly, and the effect is heightened by the use of plain and figured fabrics. A frock of cerise and white may be ornamented by a pannier of solid cerise, which although quite full must not be placed in such a position that the figure will be shortened or thickened.

Pinks of the palest tints, wistaria, khaki and certain yellows are favored. The waist lines vary from half-empire to the moyen age. Most of these dresses have round skirts and even the thinnest and most elaborate of these gowns fail to touch the ground.

A Doucet robe of soft tulle or mousseline, seen the other day, was designed with a pannier skirt, thereby detracting nothing from the height and slenderness of the figure. Many of these gowns are trimmed with corded piping, and it is the exact trimming that admirably suits the style.

Hats for the midsummer season are big. In white and black hats Neapolitans, chips and the rough straws are seen on the fashionably garbed woman. For trimming the popular high style white agrettes and black velvet ribbon, about three inches wide, are used. Black Neapolitans with trimmings of willow plumes or black agrettes are afad. Cool looking white hyacinths, lilies of the valley and cape Jassamines with moss-green foliage make an attractive combination. A beautiful model worn at a recent social function was a black Neapolitan, turned up at both sides. Its only trimming was a strawberry shaded agrette, running toward the back. Another hat was a broad-brimmed, flat crown ed chip, with only a band and a flat bow of black velvet ribbon for adornment.

The costume artists seldom fail to complete a gown without a touch of black satin, and on a bright foulard frock the effect is very good. A pretty gown made recently by Paquin was designed with short round skirt, with fish-wife drapery and a corsage crossed with a kind of bretelle sash of the folded foulard edged with narrow bands of black satin. This corsage sash crossed over the shoulders, narrowed at the waistline at the back and ended in two long ends trimmed with satin. Paquin is making a specialty of long, tight sleeves, with tight wristbands of black satin ribbon edged with a touch of color and perhaps gold buttons.

There is some talk here and in Paris about the revival of the sash. With the coming of the Louis styles it is more than probable that the sash will be again used, and many of the moyen age gowns at present in vogue show the sash draped around the figure at the base of the hips, has a sash bow placed high above the waist line at the back, with ends drooping gracefully to the knee. The sash is always a graceful and becoming dress adjunct and most women will welcome its speedy return to favor.

For informal wear there is nothing at present in the fashion list so attractive as the various modifications of the Moyen Age. Not only does this style display the beauty of the summer fabrics to their best advantage, but it gives scope for unusual decorative schemes. So far, these have the added charm of novelty. For morning, for street and for traveling gowns the symmetrical lines, the broad trimming effects, and the very general suggestion of simplicity render the move age style peculiarly suitable. Moreover, delightful confections may be made at comparatively small expense, because from one to three yards less material is required than for other modes.

Gloves, long, and of silk, with fancy embroidered designs on the upper part, are very smart. They are unusually long this season and match, not one's dress but stockings, hand bags, hat and veil.

Some of the models, it must be admitted resemble almost too closely the old fashioned wrapper, but that is rather a matter of decoration than of cut and any such pronounced effect is easily eliminated by a change of the trimming line. The sleeve, too, is especially important in this style of dress, the long straight sleeve or one in which the lines follow the lines of the body portion being imperative. Any fulness at the top is to be avoided, although it is possible to employ a tucked sleeve by turning the folds upward in a direct slant line and having them all carefully laid. In fact, any sleeve that is used in this connection is more satisfactory if the general tendency of the trimming is toward the top.

Embroidery on stockings is more popular this season than it has been for the past three years. This is accounted for by the vogue of the embroidered gloves, which are supposed to match the hosiery in color and design.

Tub dresses, as a general rule, are becoming and fetching when made of even the simplest materials obtainable, like muslins, dimities, chambrays or gingham, either French or American. Thin goods are attractive when trimmed in round thread and valenciennes laces; the heavier materials in the heavier laces, like torchon or imitation baby Irish, dresses are cool; yet the wearer obtains the "complete dress" effect and the graceful lines that are killed when one simply wears a blouse and Footwear does not so religiously match the gown as of yore and one frequently sees tan pumps or Oxfords with buckled straps, or pumps with one eyelet and bows of ribbon worn with blue stockings to match the gown. With black shoes white, pink, blue or lavender stockings to match the gown are worn; or the footwear may match the gown, while the stockings, gloves, parasol and handbag match each other.

IRELAND'S STORY

get a sufficient supply of books for the new monasteries, as the copying of manuscripts was a slow matter. Such continental monasteries as those founded by Columbanus at Luxeuil, Fontaines, and Bobbit got their supply of books from the Irish schools, and up to the tenth century it was the custom of the Irish teachers to carry books from their island home to their schools on the continent. There are numerous instances of donations of manuscripts made by Irish scholars to foreign schools. Thus, in 823, a learned Irishman gave a number of books to the monastery of Bobbio. Two of these may still be seen in the Ambrosian Library at Milan. Not long after, in 841, Marcus, an Irish bishop, who was returning with his nephew from a pilgrimage to Rome, visited the monastery of Saint Gall in Switzerland. He was so charmed with the view that he remained there for the rest of his life, and, out of gratitude for the hospitality he received, willed his books to the monastery.

As all books at this time were written by hand, penmanship was one of the most cultivated arts, and was carried to a wonderful degree of perfection. The scribes, who were generally, but not invariably, monks were held in great respect by the people. The Irish books were not only finely written, but also ornamented in a fashion which was early perfected in Ireland. First the initial letters were made larger, more elaborate, and more beautiful than they were surrounded with dots of color, and finally with delicately interlaced scroll-work, which was sometimes continued along the margin of the page. Decorated headpieces and tail-pieces were added, in which leaves, the figures of animals and serpents, and sometimes even portraits of saints were mingled with the interlaced scroll-work. Many colors were used. Red, green, pink, blue and yellow, for instance, are employed in the illumination of the Book of Kells. So well were these colors made that after twelve centuries they have lost none of their original brilliancy. The Book of Kells was finished before the end of the seventh century, and is, without doubt, the most perfect and most beautiful manuscript in the world. It is a Latin manuscript of the Gospels. The Book of Armagh, finished in 807, contains the offenses of Saint Patrick, the Epistle to orotians, and a Life of the apostle of Ireland. The Book of Durrow, written shortly after the same as the Book of Kells, and Book of MacDarnan, written shortly after the Book of Armagh, show the same admirable workmanship.

SUMMARY.
About the time when Saint Patrick was working in Ireland, the Roman Empire was attacked and conquered by hordes of pagans from the north and east of Europe. These pagans destroyed the institutions of the Roman Empire, and overthrew the Christian churches and schools. A period of lawlessness and ignorance began, from which the modern nations of western Europe gradually emerged. Missionaries and teachers from Ireland were the strongest influence in reviving Christianity and spreading classical learning over Britain, France, Belgium, Germany, Austria, and Switzerland; and Irish teachers penetrated as far as Iceland, Russia, and the extreme south of Italy. For centuries they provided all northern Europe with books.

BIG PLANT IS CAUSE OF COMMENT

The large plant to be erected at Wells, Michigan, for the extraction of tannic acid from hemlock bark, represents an improvement in the process of tanning which has established economies in the manufacture of leather and enabled tanners to sell their product at lower figures. Formerly the tan bark was shipped in sail and steam vessels to the various tanneries, where it was ground up and subjected to treatment for the extraction of the tannic acid while the process of tanning was at the same time in progress. By extracting the tannic acid close to the hemlock forests the cost of handling and shipping the bark is saved. Most of the big tanneries of the country have already adjusted themselves to the new order of things, and the old bark process is now in vogue only where sole and belting leather are made.—Evening Wisconsin.

RESERVES PLAN ANNUAL CRUISE

Concerning the plans for the annual cruise of the Escanaba and Hancock division of the State Naval Reserves the Calumet Evening News says:

On Saturday evening next the training ship Yantic, with the Hancock and Escanaba division of the naval militia on board will start for Thunder bay, in Lake Huron, where the several vessels of the great lakes naval militia representing the states of Michigan, Illinois, Minnesota, and Ohio will mobilize. The entire fleet, consisting of the flag ship Nashville of Chicago, Gopher of Minnesota, Yantic and Don Juan de Austria of Michigan, Dorothea, Hawk and Essex of Ohio and the U. S. S. recruiting ship Wolverine, will then start on a cruise about the lake, with maneuvers in various features of ship practice taking place near Manitow Island.

The Yantic is ready for the trip having been coaled last week. The repairs and painting that were done during the past spring have made her practically a new ship so far as interior equipment is concerned. New engine signals have been installed, connecting with the chart house and bridge. There is a new steel range in the galley, new china lockers and chinaware, new steam steering gear, new funnel, and fresh paint everywhere from stem to stern and from mainlop to keel.

The weekly drills that have been held by the crew at Superior beach, have proven invaluable to the men and the reserves expect to make a good showing in competition with the other boats of the fleet in the ten days' maneuver extending from August 10 to 20.

Orders as to the cruise have been received by Lieutenant Henry Hecker of Houghton, commanding the Hancock division, from Beekman Winthrop, assistant secretary of the navy. The maneuvers will be in charge of Commander C. C. Marsh, U. S. N., and the inspection of the hulls of the ships of the fleet will be made by Naval Constructor D. C. Cutting. A naval officer will also be assigned to each vessel to act in an advisory capacity, these officers to constitute the board of inspectors.

JUDGE GLASER IS BITTEN BY DOG

Judge Emil Glaser was bitten by a dog while walking on the sidewalk near his home on Thursday evening and although the wound was properly cauterized immediately the injury is being carefully watched by the attending physician. The dog which attacked the judge has never been of a vicious disposition and the cause for the animal's action cannot be imagined.

APPLETON, WIS., July 31.—Mark S. Catlin, the famous University of Chicago football and track star, and for four years director of physical training and athletic at the State University of Iowa, has formally accepted the position of athletic director at Lawrence college, Appleton, Wis.

The acquisition of a coach of the caliber of Catlin gives Lawrence college an enviable rank among colleges of the United States, and judging from the numerous inquiries to President Samuel Plantz since announcement was made that Catlin would come, there will be a wealth of material for all kinds of teams.

Although Mr. Catlin's fame is as an athlete, he built up an excellent reputation while at Iowa University for his influence on boys and young men. President McLean of Iowa writes that parents of many students at Iowa have urged him to retain Catlin because of his influence. That being impossible, Mr. McLean congratulates President Plantz.

Catlin made the University of Chicago football and track teams in his freshman year and made good four years, being captain of each during that period.

On graduation with the degree of bachelor of philosophy at Chicago in 1905, Catlin went to Iowa as coach and to take the law course. He graduated in June, 1909, as bachelor of laws. He will have a law office in Appleton.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 31.—Senator Slason of Mississippi, proposes to levy a tax of $2 and 25 per cent. ad valorem on every revolver, dirk, stillito, bowie knife or pair of metal knuckles manufactured here or imported. He proposes that there be a tax of one-tenth to one-fifth a cent each on cartridges according to the size. This would produce revenue, all right, he says.

Democrats plan to fight the tariff conference report.

FIRE-SWEPT LAND TO BE FRUITFUL

(Special to Morning Press.)
CALUMET, Mich., July 31.—Upper peninsula woodsmen are almost unanimous in the statement that the fire swept tracks of land will soon become renowned huckleberry patches.

Prominent Calumet sportsmen who were recently in the woods, discovered blueberry and huckleberry plants growing where they had never been known before.

Blueberries will not be ripe in the copper country for several weeks, and the huckleberries will take even longer than the blueberries.

The strawberry season in the copper country is rapidly passing, having been somewhat shorter this year than usual.

Wild raspberries are now ripe.

SHOT OVER SCANDAL; WARNS DAUGHTER OF EVILS OF DANCING

(Special to Morning Press.)
WATSEKA, Ill., July 31.—The will of J. B. Saylor, who was slain was made public today. It is dated June 17, 1905.

It provides that his bank stock is to be held until his daughter, Goldie, becomes of age, when it is to be turned over to her. The residence is to be the home of wife and child. Goldie's schooling is provided for, and he asks her to refrain from dancing. It contains no hint of his tragedy recently enacted.

RACE SHOWS THAT NORTHERN WAVE IS FASTEST OF BOATS

(Special to Morning Press.)
CLEVELAND, O., July 31.—No longer is the steamer North Wind the pennant bearer for the fleet of the Mutual Transit company. The steamer Northern Wave demonstrated her ability to walk away from the Wind in a 100-mile race between Cleveland and Windsor.

Capt. Nell Anderson of the Wave said nothing, but waited for a chance.

The two boats were at Cleveland Monday.

The two boats, evenly loaded and drawing exactly the same amount of water, left the Cleveland harbor at the same moment. Both boats were bound for Windsor and the race of 100 miles began.

The boats were abreast for a long distance. The Wave entered the harbor at Windsor past twenty minutes ahead of her rival.

Capt. Anderson was the happiest man afloat, and the crew could hardly wait to "rub it in." There was little sleep for any one.

CAPT. MADSEN IS SUSPENDED; SLEPT

(Special to Morning Press.)
MENOMINEE, Mich., July 31.—Capt. Lars Madsen of Sturgeon Bay was suspended by the steamboat inspectors of Milwaukee for a period of eight months on account of the stranding of the steamer Sailor Boy on Washington Island July 14.

In his report Capt. Madsen admitted having gone to sleep at the wheel.

In his report of their findings the inspectors declare that he had opportunity for rest and sleep, but did not avail himself of the privilege.

Capt. Madsen's frank statement of the affair was the proper thing to do. In his anxiety to serve the people for whom he was working he neglected himself until nature asserted itself and he fell a victim to the demand for rest at a most inopportune time, and though it seemed only an instant it was long enough for the boat to pile up on the beach.

DEPLORES DEATH OF THE ERICKSONS

The Norway Current says:—"The tragic death of the Hon. Ole Erickson of Escanaba, last Saturday, took from that city, from Delta county and from the State of Michigan, a man most useful in either private or public life; a man who was an unwavering ally and an honorable opponent.

"Pronounced in his opinions, Mr. Erickson and his dislikes, he was nevertheless at all times fair; and willing to concede to others the right to their individual opinions."

"The test of a man's personality is his ability to 'wear well' in his public relations and that a quarter of a century's wear had failed to show the baser metal in the composition of Ole Erickson is evidenced by the places of responsibility and trust held by him at the time of his demise; and by the sorrow so openly expressed by the entire community."

EXCURSION WILL ATTRACT MANY

It is expected that the steamer Maywood will carry a capacity load of pleasure seekers to Washington island today when that boat will make a special trip to that place and that the people of Escanaba may be offered a delightful day's outing away from the heat and business cares of the city.

The boat will leave the Stephenson dock bound for the island at 9:15 a. m. and will arrive at Washington harbor at 11 o'clock, giving the visitors a number of hours to enjoy at the different beauty spots about the island. Returning the boat will leave the island at 4:30 o'clock and will deliver the excursionists in the city at 6:30 o'clock. The fare for the round trip has been fixed by the officials of the boat company at 50 cents and at that low rate a great crowd should be attracted.

MAYWOOD GROWS AS RESORT PLACE

The summer resort season is now at its height at Maywood. All of the cottages at the popular upper bay resort place are now filled and in addition the shore is lined with a great number of camping parties.

The popularity of Maywood as a summer resting place not only for people of Escanaba but for others living at great distances, is fast growing each year the number of people attracted there being larger than the previous season. Early in August a large party of visitors will come to Maywood from Kansas, cottages for all of the visitors having been engaged far in advance.
