No Change at Next Session of Congress Says
S. E. Payne

BUSINESS MEN ARE SATISFIED

So Declares New York Author of Measure Which is now in Force

(Special to Morning Press.)
WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 14.—There will be no change in the Payne tariff bill at the next session of congress.

This is the conviction of Representative Sereno E. Payne, New York, whose name the measure bears.

"I am quite confident," said Mr. Payne, "that there will be no necessity to change the new tariff bill at the coming session of congress. Business men all over the country studied paragraphs in which they were particularly interested, and the conferees sought to make every item accurate and every word of the law mean what congress intended."

"It may be, although I seriously doubt it, that some technicality may be discovered in the process of administering the law, but unless this occurs I do not anticipate any legislative changes."

"Between now and March 31, 1910, the president will be at work investigating tariffs of foreign countries to ascertain whether they are unduly discriminatory against American products and whether it will be necessary to apply maximum provisions to them. If after this careful study in the measure to congress they will be carefully considered."

"The tariff bill has been a law just a little over a week. That is too short a time to permit of accurate predictions or estimates."

"It is impossible to judge accurately the probable revenue producing qualities of this law under present importations. They are certain to fall to some extent after the first rush of trade is over, I am satisfied, however, up to date, but shall anxiously await further developments, for I have predicted and am convinced that the law will become an excellent revenue producer."

SHOPS NOW ON NINE HOUR BASIS

Local Railroad Employes Benefitted by Action of Company's Officials at Chicago Headquarters. Present Increase Has Long Been Sought For

Following immediately on the announcement that the heaviest payroll in the history of the Peninsula division of the North Western road will be distributed here this week, comes the information that the pay of all machinists, blacksmiths and boiler-makers in the employ of the North Western road at this station has been increased.

The increase is not a heavy one the prospects of the coming and its tendency to deal fairly with its employes.

The employes affected by the increase will, according to the new order received here yesterday from the headquarters at Chicago receive one cent an hour more for their labor. The machinists employed in the local shops who up to this time have been receiving 37 cents an hour in the future will receive 38 cents an hour.

Under the order received yesterday the local shops are also placed on a nine hour working basis and any time put in by the men after the completion of their nine hours will be charged as overtime.

It is provided in the instructions received here that the increase shall go into effect on Aug. 1 and the employes benefitted will find the added amount in their next pay checks.

From Invalid's Bed for Sixteen Years Will S. Adams of Marquette, Mich., Wrote Copy for Marquette Daily--
Knew President Diaz of Mexico

(Special to Morning Press.)
MARQUETTE, Mich., Aug. 14.—In the death of Will S. Adams there has passed a unique figure. He was the editor and publisher of the Marquette Chronicle, an eight-page daily and worked on a couch from which he never arose and which he had occupied continuously since 1883. He was aged 32 yet his weight

His hearing was acute, however; his voice was unimpaired, and his brain was keen.

He had the distinction of being the first American boy introduced to President Diaz of Mexico. He also was a personal friend of former Commander-in-Chief Reyes of the Mexican army, now governor of the

13 LEFT AT MAYWOOD ON FRIDAY THE 13TH BY 13 BAND MEN

(Special to Morning Press.)
PORT HURON, Mich., Aug. 14.—Fifteen long-horned steers of the Texas variety, marching in the parade of a wild west show which is performing here, broke into the crowd of spectators, and in the panic a number of persons were hurt, either by being hooked or trampled. Dogs started it.

Near the front of the crowd stood Miss Jennie Inley, 29, of Grayling. She was carried unconscious to a doctor's office. She is severely injured internally.

Roger Becktold, 6, son of Peter Becktold, a contractor, was caught on the horns of one of the steers and tossed, later being trampled. The showmen were prompt to cope with the trouble.

STEERS TRAMPLE PARADE CROWD

(Special to Morning Press.)
SAULT STE. MARIE, Aug. 14.—The fabled superstition of mariners over ill omens was strengthened Friday, the 13th, when the big freighter Philipps and Morrell collided in the fog of Point St Ignace, at the entrance to Lake Superior.

Quick action on the part of the wheelman avoided a catastrophe. The Morrell, upbound light, met the Philipps, ore laden and low in the water.

The Morrell carried seven passengers, including four women.

Plates on both ships above the water line were smashed and the Morrell returned here for repairs.

LABORER FALLS FROM TOP OF OLD NO. 5 DOCK

FRIDAY, 13TH; HOODOO ON LAKE

(Special to Morning Press.)
SAULT STE. MARIE, Aug. 14.—Carried headlong from the top of the North Western No 5 dock which is being dismantled, and falling to the ground 30 feet below with a heavy timber descending on top of his body, John Dumas, a laborer, narrowly escaped death yesterday morning.

Dumas was engaged in prying loose a heavy timber from the land portion of the dock when it suddenly gave way and a plank above, which had been loosened, fell striking him on the arm. The workman was thrown over the side of the dock and tumbled to the ground below. In his fall Dumas carried with him a heavy stick of timber which fell directly across his legs and another, following a second later struck him across the breast and arms.

Fellow employes who witnessed the accident rushed to their companion below expecting to find him either dead or fatally injured but after the timbers were lifted off he regained consciousness.

A physician was quickly summoned and after a hasty dressing of the man's wounds he was removed to his boarding place at Mineau's saloon. The flesh of both arms and legs is badly lacerated and crushed but no bones were broken.

He will be confined to his room for some time.

Dumas but a short time ago completed a term of service in the United States army and has been in the city for but a week.

MOTHER ADOPTS HER OWN CHILD

(Special to Morning Press.)
PONTIAC, Mich., Aug. 14.—Mrs. Nellie Vanderliner has just legally adopted her own daughter, Mabel Irene, 11 years of age.

In 1906 adoption papers for the little girl were taken out by Mr. and Mrs. Milo Gordon, she then received the name of Gordon. Later Mrs. Gordon died and Mr. Gordon remarried, and now has a child of his own.

Again wishing to have her own child, the mother was lawfully compelled to formally adopt her own daughter.

HOME-COMING PROCLAMATION

The Committee in charge of the County Fair and Farmer's Picnic have suggested to me that it would be extremely pleasant to make Thursday, August 26, which has been selected as Home Coming Day, a Home Coming Day in all that the words imply. The Day has been extensively advertised and a large number of former residents of the city will be here for the occasion. The County Fair committee has said to me that they feel that the arrangements of a formal program for the day should be in the hands of a committee of old residents, and I am asked to name such committee.

I believe the suggestion is a good one and I hope the day will be made one which will long be remembered. Therefore I entrust the work of making suitable plans for the day to the following Committee of fifty.

I trust that the gentlemen, whom I have selected will prepare a program which will assure pleasant entertainment for those at home and all who visit the city to renew old friendships.

SOLOMON GREENHOOT, Mayor.

HOME-COMING COMMITTEE IS NAMED BY MAYOR GREENHOOT TO MAKE PLANS FOR CELEBRATION HERE ON AUG. 26

Through the action taken by Mayor Solomon Greenhoot yesterday in naming a committee of 50 prominent citizens of Escanaba to assume charge of the home coming feature of the celebration to be held here on Aug. 26, 27 and 28, the success of that portion of the big week's program has been assured. The members of the committee named by the mayor will meet at once to make plans for the entertainment of the home comers and provide for their reception when they arrive here and nothing will be left undone to make the undertaking a success.

With the avalanche of post cards sent out in the past few days announcing the home coming celebration, hundreds of former Escanaba residents now living in different parts of the country have been informed of the celebration and it is confidently believed that many will avail themselves of this opportunity to visit their old home and renew acquaintances with old time friends.

With the plans for home coming day lifted from their shoulders the members of the fair committee will redouble their efforts and devote all of their time to that feature of the program.

Every farmer throughout the district surrounding Escanaba is making plans to come to Escanaba for at least two days of the big three day celebration here. The different granges of the county have a total membership of over 700 and as every farmer in the district be he a member of the organization or not is invited and expected to come here a great crowd of visitors is assured.

Entertainment plans for the visitors are now nearly completed and that there will be something in store for every hour of the two days is assured by the committee.

ALFONSO'S YACHT MAY COME OVER

(Special to Morning Press.)
LONDON, ENG. 14.—Reports are current in yachting circles here that King Alfonso of Spain is a possible challenger for the America's cup. The reports are apparently based on the fact that the king, during the construction of his yacht Hispania, which was built in Spain from designs by Pife, evinced curiosity regarding the conditions governing the contests of this trophy.

(Special to Morning Press.)
MECOSTA, Mich., Aug. 14.—Found by a neighbor lying in a clump of bushes by the roadside with his skull fractured, Abraham Barnhart, 59, a farmer died in spite of a trephining operation.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Says the Deseret News:
"One of the discouraging signs of the times is the necessity for enlarging penal institutions."
As an isolated proposition, that may seem to be true, but when considered in relation to other things it may not be nearly so discouraging as it appears at first blush.
It is a fact that it is necessary to enlarge the jails as we go along and prepare more and more room for malefactors and law-breakers. That has been incidental to the progress of all civilization and probably all ways will be. The unrighteous citizen we have with us forever, we presume. It is hardly reasonable to expect anything less this side of the millennium—and the millennium is not generally thought to be right at hand.
But while penitentiaries are being expanded, churches are going up, schoolhouses are being built and enlightenment and education being spread abroad throughout the land as never before. We are reaching constantly for higher ideals in our civic affairs, and, while we meet opposition, we are constantly gaining ground, we think. Then, too, men differ in their conceptions of truthfulness. Some people think it morally wrong to whistle a jolly and lighthearted tune on the Sabbath day; others take a more liberal view of that. Some people imagine virtue can be legislated into people; others think that the most sadly mistaken of all sadly mistaken ideas. The pendulum swings back and forth but out of the mass of mistakes and ## blunders is constantly growing a better average condition, nevertheless.

This is not an age for pessimism whatever else it may be. We have far to go before we reach perfection. In all probability we shall never achieve the entire journey; but a long road stretches behind us that we shall never have to travel again, for all that. If there is much evil around, there also is much more that is not evil, we think. And for that, let us be thankful and make the most of it.

MR. DOOLEY.

"Printers' Ink! A dhrup iv it on wan little wurrud in type," says Mr. Dooley, "will blacken th'e fairest name in Christendom or make a star to shine on th' lowest brok. It will find its way into millions iv homes an' hearts an' memories; it will go thru stonewalls, an' will carry some message that may turn th' current iv lrvy life it meets—fr'm th' Imperor iv Chiny to th' baby in th' cradle in Hannigan's flat," he says.

"It may undo a thousand prayers or start a millyon. It can't be escaped. It could dhrag me out iv me parish house tomorrow, an' make me as well known in Pekin as I am in Halstead shtrvet—an' not as favorably. Today th' Pope may give me no more thought th'n he gives Kelly th' rowling-mill man. Tomorrow he may be readin' about how great or bad I am in th' Poppylo Romano. It's good I get a beat a mile in lev'n ranks."

"Yes, sir," says he; "th' hand that rocks th' fountain pen is th' hand that rules th' wurruld. Th' press is fr th' universe what Mulligan wuz fr his beat. He wuz the best poleshman an' the worst I ever knew. He was a terror to evil doers wh'n he wuz sober, an' a terror to iv'rybody wh'n he wuz drunk."
"Martin, I dhrink to th' leads all over th' wurruld who use th' printers' ink! May they not put too much iv th' red stuff in it, an' may it never go to their heads."

SUNDAY SERMON.

The latest Parisian cure for bad temper, according to a story which a writer in the New York World vouches for. A husband who had been living inharmoniously with his wife consulted a doctor.
No cause being found for the disagreement, the doctor visited the patient's home and there found red wall paper on the walls.
The doctor ordered a change. "Red," he said, "excites some tempers. Try blue," which soothing experiment was made with the result that the disposition of the wife became as angelic as before and the husband sweet tempered.
According to the doctor, a blue room tames the most exacting shrew.

These are the days that many Escanaba people appreciate the comfort which the city park affords, as a visit to that spot at almost any time of the day will disclose. Many bring benches and spend the entire day in the cool shade. The sandy shallow beach makes an ideal bathing and wading place for children. The members of the park boards during the past three or four years are certainly to be congratulated over the results secured at this park and the city can now boast of having one of the finest parks in the state—Iron Port.

SCHOOL FOR DEAF OPENS 58TH TERM

Wisconsin State Institution Has Good Prospects For Another Successful Year.

DELAVAN, Wis., Aug. 14.—The Wisconsin School for the Deaf will open its fifty-eighth school year on Wednesday, Sept. 8. Several new buildings, including the $40,000 dormitory for girls, will be used for the first time. During the summer many improvements have been made, and the school is today one of the best, if not the best, in the United States, both in buildings, equipment, and course of study.

Supt. E. W. Walker is now receiving applications for admission. The school is a state institution, and instruction, tuition, board, books, washing, light, heat and medical attendance are free to all deaf boys and girls of school age in Wisconsin. Among the advantages offered are:

- A good academic education, including high school work to prepare for college.
- Careful supervision of habits and morals. Nowhere is there a cleaner-minded lot of students collected than are at this school.
- Excellent domestic science and manual training facilities together with various trades shops, give an unusually good industrial training.
- Great attention is paid to speech and lip reading.
- Medical attention is constantly on hand for those that need it.
- Supt. E. W. Walker will be pleased to give further information on request.

Proof That They Existed, But No Specimens Are in Existence.

Dr. Sudhoff not long ago read a paper before the Leipzig Medical society on dental forceps in antiquity. He said that even before the time of Hippocrates reference to the use of such instruments are found, but no specimens are met with among the surgical implements belonging to classical times that have been discovered. This can only be due to the material of which they were made. Unlike the mass of other Graeco-Roman surgical instruments, which were nearly all of bronze, the dental forceps of antiquity must have been made of iron or steel, although no medical writer mentions the fact. In the Aristotelian "Mechanical Problems," however, there is a passage which, according to Dr. Sudhoff, has hitherto been overlooked, in which it is mentioned as a familiar fact that dental forceps were made of iron. In the museum at Homburg, where there is an almost unrivaled collection of iron implements, two steel-pointed dental forceps, one for the upper, the other for the lower jaw, have been found. That dental forceps should have formed part of the armamentarium of a military surgeon in a remote spot shows in what common use

BOSTON MARKETS

BOSTON.—The local coppers act ed especially well today and in several the buying was especially good. Lake is being steadily accumulated by Calumet & Hecla interests and although the local traders are opposing the advance, the stock is getting more and more scarce and they are daily obliged to cover with losses. There was some profit taking in Copper Range today, but the buying was all by two houses who have been steadily accumulating the stock. Scattered orders to buy Shannon kept that stock strong, while scattered selling orders in North Butte made that stock weak. There were about 2,000 North Butte offered at 60 and the traders took advantage of the fact to shade the price. After selling stock down to 12, one floor trader tried to buy East Butte and was able to secure 100 or 200 shares up to 12%. There is nothing in sight to stop the advance and we look for a boiling market next week.—FOSTER, of Palmer, Webber & Co.

NEW YORK STOCKS

NEW YORK.—The action of the market today indicated a replacement of lines together with spirited buying of the Hariman issues and the list closed near the best of the day. The list has reached a level from which sharp recessions are likely to occur unexpectedly but although the advances have been very rapid it does not seem as though stocks have been distributed to an extent that would take control from the hands of those interested responsible for the upward swing.

THE CURB MARKETS

CURBS.—The curb market was firm in tone today, but not as active as in the past few days. Cactus was traded in at 4 1/2, with considerable stock taken at that figure. Santa Rosalia continues to be strong, bids of 1 1/2 falls to bring out any stock. The listing of Yuma on the Boston curb has made that stock active, selling around 2 1/2. Inspiration seems to be working its way towards higher prices. Indiana Copper made its appearance on the local market with sales at 7%. Heavy subscriptions came this morning for the Sierra Gold flotation to be put on Monday by the Cole-Ryan interests. The stock will be oversubscribed.

NEW PROFESSOR FOR LAWRENCE

(Special to Morning Press)
Appleton, Wis., Aug. 14.—James M. Wright, Ph. D., professor of his history in the University of Missouri last year, and one of the best known research historians in the United States, has been elected to the chair of history in Lawrence college, Appleton, Wis., to succeed Prof. Freeman Havighorst, resigned.
Dr. Wright received his degree of philosophy from Johns Hopkins university, Baltimore, in 1905. He then received a grant from the Carnegie Institution of Washington, D. C., for work on the archives of the Bahama islands and for further study of the history of that colony. On his return, he was elected assistant professor of history in Johns Hopkins university.

In 1907 he received a second grant from the Carnegie Institution, this time for work on "The Free Negro in Maryland Prior to 1861." He is now working on this grant.
Dr. Wright is a graduate of William Jewell college at Liberty, Mo. He specialized in history, with political economy and political science as subordinates as a graduate student of Johns Hopkins in 1901 and received a fellowship from that university in 1903-04. He is well known for his historical dissertations, which have received wide circulation.
Dr. Wright is only 30 years old, which makes his career thus far all the more remarkable.

Charles A. Dana Had His Own Way of Impressing Members of His Staff.

Charles A. Dana, for many years the editor of the New York Sun, believed that the work of reporting should be worthy the best there is in a man. A contributor to the American Magazine gives several anecdotes of Mr. Dana's dealings with his reporters, many of whom learned from him lessons by which they profited and rose in their profession. On one occasion a reporter complained because he was kept on police court work.
"Young man," said Dana, "the greatest police court reporter who ever lived was named Charles Dickens."
Another complained that he had "boiled down" his story.
"The story of the crucifixion was told in 600 words," said Dana.
He used to come out, continues the contributor, all excitement, and pointing to a mark on the margin of a clipping, say to the managing editor: "A great sentence there, Mr. Lord. Who wrote it?"
"Who did that football story?" he asked once.
When Dana put such a question, his interlocutor used to tremble; there was no telling from his tone whether he meant to praise or to blame.
Mr. Lord named the man.
"It's Homer, that's what it is," said Dana.
"The reporter," he said again, "wields the real power of the press."
This, with all that it implies, was the thing which Dana left to his world.

CHAPTER XII. The Coming of The Normans.

87. THE BEGINNING OF THE NORMAN INVASION. In the middle of the twelfth century, Dermot MacMurrough was king of Leinster. We have found the kings of Leinster in former years repeatedly in league with the Danes of Dublin, against the kings of Meath and Connaught, and we are therefore prepared to find Dermot going even farther. In the year 1166 Dermot, who had been guilty of a series of violent actions, finally rendered himself so intolerable that Roderick O'Conor and other chiefs compelled him to surrender his kingdom and leave the country. Seeking vengeance, he fled to England and appealed to Henry II, duke of the Normans and king of the English to help him, promising allegiance. In return Henry's mind was preoccupied with the struggle for his dominions in France more than half of which country at that time acknowledged his rule. He therefore declined himself to undertake the reinstatement of Dermot, but permitted any of his subjects who were willing to engage in the adventure. Dermot immediately secured the help of Richard de Clare, earl of Pembroke, generally known as "Strongbow," who entered his service as a mercenary. To Strongbow Dermot promised the hand of his daughter Eva in marriage, while two chiefs of the Welsh, Geraldines, Maurice Fitzgerald and Robert Fitzstephen, were bought by promises of fish land, to be won from Dermot's enemies. It was thus that a renegade Irishman, that the Normans gained their first entrance into Ireland.

Fitzstephen made his first landing in one of the lesser Wexford harbors, having with him a hundred knights and six hundred archers. He joined his forces to those of Dermot MacMurrough and they marched together to attack the city of Wexford. The town was protected by a wall which as bravely defended, by the garrison, who threw large stones and heavy beams on the heads of their assailants. The Normans were compelled to withdraw on that day, and left many of their men dead behind them, but they made their way to the harbor, and burned all the Irish ships they found there. On the following day, as they were about to renew their assault, the clergy of Wexford, wishing to avoid further bloodshed, counselled the townsfolk to surrender, and Wexford was given over to Fitzstephen and his allies. Dermot thus regained a foothold in his former territory. He then fulfilled his promises to his mercenary allies by making them grants of lands.

88. ARRIVAL OF STRONGBOW. Roderick O'Conor, king of Connaught, wished to oppose the return of Dermot, but doubted his ability to meet him in the field. He therefore tried more pacific means, and, seeing the danger to Ireland from Dermot's example, he consented to accept Dermot's return, on condition that the latter should promise to dismiss his foreign mercenaries. Dermot consented in order to avoid an attack, but without any thought of keeping his promise.

Dermot's ambition had grown with his first success. He now determined to make himself king of the whole of Ireland, and proceeded to secure the help of Strongbow, who landed at Waterford in the summer of 1170, with about three thousand men. What followed is thus recorded in the Annals. Robert Fitzstephen and Earl Strongbow came from Saxondale into Erin with a numerous force, and many knights and archers, in the army of Dermot MacMurrough, to contest Leinster for him, and to disturb the Gaels of Erin in general; and MacMurrough gave his daughter to Earl Strongbow for coming into the army. They took Waterford and the city, and killed seven hundred persons there. An army was led by Roderick O'Conor with the Lord of Breefy and the Lord of Oriel against Leinster and the Foreigners aforesaid, and there was a challenge of battle between them for the space of three days. This contest was indecisive.

The most noteworthy event of Strongbow's first invasion was the plundering and slaughter of the Danes of Dublin by the new invaders. The earlier Norsemen, as we saw, were pagans; but before this time they had all been converted to Christianity. Filled with fear at the approach of Dermot and his allies, the Danes sent their archbishop, Laurence O'Toole, to negotiate terms of surrender for them. But while the terms were being discussed, the Normans attacked the Danes in their fortress, and slew great numbers of them.

89. NATIONAL RESISTANCE. Most of the invaders on these first expeditions were impoverished noblemen. The Norman king freely granted them lands belonging to the Irish tribes; and these settlers thus became the founders of the chief "Anglo-Irish" families of the later centuries. With their Irish lands these adventurers received Irish titles, adapted from those of the native chiefs. Thus the Fitzgeralds were, first, Barons of Offaly, later Earls of Kildare, and finally Dukes of Leinster. Their kinsmen in the south were made Earls of Munster.

92. STRONGBOW'S TERM OF GOVERNMENT. On his return to England, Henry II appointed Richard de Clare, called Strongbow, lord lieutenant of Ireland. Most of the Irish princes had once more asserted their independence, and Strongbow determined to take active measures against them. His soldiers, whose pay was long in arrears, were discontented, and refused to march under any leader, but their favorite, Raymond Fitzgerald, a brilliant officer, who allowed them to plunder to their hearts' content. Strongbow was forced to remove his own uncle from the command of the army, appointing Raymond Fitzgerald in his place. Then began the first Norman raid among the peaceful districts of Ireland. Raymond Fitzgerald led his men southward. On the southern blackwater near Lismore, "the great fort," he seized a number of boats and loaded them with plunder, sending them down the river and along the coast to the city of Waterford. He and his men drove a great number of cattle before them, the most valuable part of their plunder. The boats were attacked on their way by a fleet, half Irish, half Danish, from Cork; and the party of Raymond's men who were proceeding by land at the same time had to meet an onslaught from Dermot MacCarthy prince of Desmond. Both these attacks were repulsed, and Raymond and his plunderers escaped with their booty.

After this raid, Raymond Fitzgerald returned to his home in Wales. During his absence, Strongbow took the field against Donall O'Brien, king of Thomond, a descendant of Brian Boru, the victor of Clontarf. Donall was entrenched at Limerick, and hearing of Strongbow's coming, he sent for aid to Roderick O'Conor, who came with his Connaught men to help him. They met the earl's army some thirty miles to the east of Limerick, near Thurles in Tipperary, and Strongbow was completely defeated, losing seventeen hundred men. "Strongbow," says the Annals, "proceeded in sorrow to his home at Waterford." Here he was besieged by the Irish armies, until Raymond Fitzgerald drove Donall O'Brien back to Limerick, and by an impetuous attack, captured the city and put the defenders to the sword. A garrison was left there to uphold the Norman power.

Raymond Fitzgerald had enemies at court, who sought to arouse the distrust of Henry II, and to make him jealous of the brilliant general's success. The king even sent an order for his recall, but Raymond soon found occasion to vindicate himself. The Irish armies made a vigorous attack on the Norman garrison at Limerick. Strongbow once more found that his army would follow no leader but Raymond, and sent the king word that Raymond must remain. Raymond made a forced march to the southwest, defeated Donall O'Brien and relieved the Limerick garrison.

93. DE BURGO'S GOVERNMENT. The king was still distrustful, however; and on Strongbow's death in the next year, 1176, the office of lord lieutenant was given, not to Raymond Fitzgerald, but to William de Burgo, whose family name is modernized as Burke. To assist William de Burgo in the government, Henry appointed a council of three Norman nobles: John de Courcy, Robert Fitzstephen, and Miles de Cogan. The lord lieutenant was disposed to adopt more peaceful methods, and discouraged the semi-independent warfare of leaders like Raymond. He was therefore, very unpopular among the crowd of fortune hunters about him. Chief among these was De Courcy, to whom King Henry had made a nominal grant of Ulster, where, however, he had little or no real authority. De Courcy determined to undertake the work of conquest on his own account, and left Dublin with an army of knights and archers, in all about a thousand men. In the beginning of February, 1177, he attacked Downpatrick, the chief stronghold of eastern Ulster. The town was taken by surprise, captured and plundered. Before the end of the week, the prince of Ulster, a nation of the chiefs, who had come with the intention of acknowledging Henry's overlordship, was now

JOHNSON SAYS JIM JEFF WILL NOT FIGHT HIM

(Special to Morning Press.) GALVESTON, Aug. 14.—"Jim Jeffries does not intend to meet me."

This was one of the sentences in a letter sent by Jack Johnson to his brother here.

Johnson made one statement which comes as something of a surprise. This was to the effect that he had plenty of money. He admitted that he had bought one auto and that he had spent a considerable sum in renting autos in various cities where he made flying trips. He said nothing about the numerous occasions on which he has been fined for exceeding the speed limits.

Too Many of the Great Financiers of To-Day Are Believers in the Idea of the Brazilians.

Joseph Widener, a young Philadelphia millionaire, was entertaining a party of Anglo-Americans at luncheon at the Ritz, in London.

The day was mild and sunny, and the French windows of the beautiful restaurant stood open on the green park and Piccadilly. A limousine glided swiftly past Devonshire's house, a well-known American millionaire sat in the sumptuous car, and Mr. Widener, nodding toward the man, said to his neighbor:

"That is Bonna. He made 19 millions last year."

"Is he honest?" the neighbor, an Englishman, inquired. Mr. Widener laughed.

"Well, Lord John," he replied, "Bonna's moral code resembles that imputed to the Brazilians. It is liberal. It countenances many shady things."

"In Brazil, you know, in introducing a friend to your banker, in recommending him to a business associate and so forth, you show the highest confidence in him—a confidence that can go no further—when you say: 'This is my friend. For all he steals I will be responsible.'"

Failure. Wherever there is a failure there is some giddiness, some superstition about luck, some step omitted, which nature never pardons.—Emerson.

Timely News and Notes for the Realm of Women and Girls

By Fredericka Herman

"Have you always been a tramp?" "Not always, str. I have seen bet- days."

"What is your name?" "I prefer not to tell you, str."

"Proud, eh? Oh, very well, then. How long have you been a tramp?"

"Only a few months."

"Can't you find work?" "I haven't found more than enough to keep body and soul together, str. up to date."

The men conversed throughout the sumptuous meal, the old man becoming deeply interested in his lone com- panion. He was surprised at his re- finement and education. Before the dessert was brought in he said:

"I'll see what I can do for you, young man. I believe that you de- serve better things. How would you like to work in one of my lumber yards?"

"I am grateful to you, str.," said Jerry, and he was plainly embarrassed, "but—where is your lumber yard?"

"Here is Portland," and the old man frowned a little.

"As I said, str. I am impressively thankful to you for the interest and kindness," said Jerry, "but I don't think the climate here—so far north—will agree with me, and—"

"Don't you want to work?" snapped the old man, red in the face. "Do you want to keep on being an object of charity?"

Jerry could think of nothing to say before the old man fairly roared:

"You are a lazy dog! Get out of this house and never let me see you again! Don't wait for the dessert, for you'll not get another mouthful in this house, str!"

At the first outburst Jerry was out of his seat and coddily bowing his way to the door.

"Huxley," cried the fuming old man, "throw this worthless fellow into the street."

Huxley, a frail little Englishman of middle age, took on an expression of severity that caused Jerry to smile. He moved towards him, but stopped abruptly when Jerry flashed a vicious glare from his eyes.

"Come on, str. come on—no loiter- ing, no loitering, str.," said Huxley in a cracked, trembling voice, touching his arm ever so lightly. The moment his fingers touched his arm Jerry's hands were clenched and his face was red.

"Take that hand off of me!" said Jerry, softly—then fiercely: "Take it off, I say, or I'll throw you through that window!"

The old man's chin dropped in amazement and poor Huxley backed up until the wall stopped him, his face as white as a ghost.

word. He simply focused his wild eyes on Jerry and excitedly pointed to him.

"Is this the guy?" asked the police- man.

"He's got my wife's purse!" the pudgy man blurted. "He snatched it from—"

"Your wife's purse?" gasped Jerry, his face as pale as death. "I never saw your wife in— Search me, officer, for heaven's sake!"

The policeman felt his pockets. "You see I haven't his wife's purse," Jerry added.

"Aw, cheese it!" sneered the officer; "that's an old car—swipe it and then throw it away when you see you're goin' to be plinched!"

A few minutes later a patrol wagon changed its way through the fast-grow- ing crowd, and before Jerry could make any further protest he was hustled into it.

The officer accompanied him to the station, a few blocks away. As Jerry stepped to the pave- ment, his arm in the firm grasp of the officer's big hand, his heart almost ceased beating. Standing near the steps leading to the station were Bernard Bayless, Mrs. Bayless and Maryella Bayless. They were looking directly at him when he heard their unformed guide say:

"Only a common sneak thief, I guess. They pick 'em up down here every few minutes."

The pudgy little man, who gave his name as Sylvester Orrencoot Igenfritz of Akron, O., preferred a charge against Jerry, and gave notice that he would appear against him in the morning.

"That little sawed-off can't identify me," he concluded, "and the copper can't say that he found the goods on me. But I'll just make it a point to keep this Mr. Sylvester Lippincott Igenfritz, or whatever his name is, in mind, and one of these sweet days I'll make him sorry that his wife ever owned a purse. I wish that this had happened on New Year's day, for then I would have made it my strong- est resolve to visit Akron, O., with a mission."

At 9:30 in the morning Jerry was standing before a red-nosed magis- trate in a stuffy little hole that was dignified by the name of courtroom.

"Firs' case," yawned the justice. "Pickpocketin'," said the officer who had made the arrest, pointing to Jerry.

"What did you want with the wom- an's money—get a shave?" asked the magistrate, who glared in his news- paper reputation as a wit.

"No—a hair-cut," answered Jerry, running his hand over his face.

"Don't get fresh!" snapped the jus- tice. "You need a little salting down. Is this the fellow that snatched your wife's purse?" addressing Mr. Igenfritz.

"Yes, sir, your honor, it is!" an- swered the accuser most decisively, and with an emphasis adding head.

Jerry turned pale as a ghost as he looked into the little man's beaming face. Then, in an instant, the blood was surging to his head, and he cried out:

"You're a liar, you little mutton- head! I'll fix you—"

The court squelched him with: "Ninety days!"

Every other 'Tanks'gvin' Jerry smiled as the guard went away. "He has a nice disposition," he said to himself; "and I'll bet he's a model family man."

When the first day of March rolled around Jerry's beard was long enough to braid, and his joints were so stiff from lack of exercise that he felt like an old man. Almost all of the little flesh that was on his bones when he was arrested was gone, and his clothes were a caricature misfit. It was a most unusual thing, but at that time there were, besides himself, only two pris- oners in the station, whose "times" were almost "up."

On March 14, when there was not a spark of hope in Jerry's breast that he would get to Los Angeles in time for his instructions.

Old Finnerty had taken something of a fancy to Jerry, and gave him the least disagreeable work to do. Jerry performed so well, and seemed to show such personal interest in the guard's welfare, that the old man was greatly pleased. That night Finnerty actually thanked him, after he had given him a fine apple and a glassful of real milk. The ranking officer also was pleased with Jerry's work.

"I'm glad you're satisfied," said Jerry to the ranking officer, "and if you want to do something for me you can make me feel like a new man. Cut these whiskers off and give me a shave. They make me feel like a pat- ent-medicine man."

The officer complied with the re- quest, and when Jerry lay down that night he felt almost as young as he used to be.

The following morning he was put to work clearing up the rubbish and refuse in the little courtyard back of the station. Finnerty piled up boxes while Jerry shoveled the refuse into heaps near the gate of the picket- topped high board fence. The guard had implicit faith in him, and fre- quently went into the station, leaving him alone in the courtyard. While Jerry was shoveling out the contents of a big dry goods box he came across an old slouch hat. The instant his eyes fell on it the thought of escape flashed across his mind. Finnerty's back was turned at the moment, and before he faced about Jerry had thrown the hat over the fence into the alley.

His first impulse was to steal up be- hind the guard and beat him into in- sensibility, but his liking for the old man, more than anything, stayed the violent hand. He respected Finnerty's white hair, but the thought of what might fall to the guard's lot if he ef- fected his escape was quickly brushed aside.

"Finnerty," said Jerry after a time, sitting down and pressing a hand to his stomach and screwing up his mouth, "get me something for the cramps, will you? I've got 'em bad."

"Sure, kid," said the guard, and the next moment he was in the station.

Jerry scrambled over the fence, tearing his trousers on the sharp- pointed pickets, and dropped into the alley. Picking up the hat, he ran as fast as he could to the street, where he reduced his gait to a brisk walk.

He crossed to the next corner, where, to a surprise that almost took his legs from under him, he ran almost into the policeman who had arrested him. The relief that came with his sight when the officer passed by with- out even looking into his face was great.

Jerry hid himself in a lumber yard until the street lights began to twinkle. His excitement was so great that he forgot all about his hunger until, about 11 o'clock, he was riding on the trucks of a car near the middle of a south-bound passenger train.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

Just as the Clock Strikes Two.

About four o'clock in the morning Jerry had further occasion to curse a "Gemini's" luck. A "hot box" at his end of the coach brought the train to a stop near the "tag" station of Gonzales. Before the engine had come to a standstill the fireman was at the "hot box" with his torch. Jerry tried to scramble off the trucks, but the en- gineerman had him by the nape of the neck before he could get to his feet.

"Hey, Charley!" shouted the coal- heaver, and a moment later a big brakeman came up. "Charley" swung Jerry around until his face was direct- ly east and then let fly a big boot with great accuracy.

"Now, you skin!" said "Charley." "Get over that fence and don't move a muscle until the train's on its way. If you try to get back on I'll beat your 'block' into a jelly!"

Jerry limped to the edge of the right of way and leaned against the fence, the big trainman's eyes on him all the time.

"Say, pal," he pleaded, "take me on to Los Angeles, won't you? I'll fix things with you one of these days. If you were in my fix and had a mighty slick mother—"

IRELAND'S STORY

WELL TOLD

(Continued from page 3.) thoroughly aroused; they deter- mined with a numerous army came against De Courcy, and attempted to retak Downpatrick, but was defeated and slain, as were many other Ulster- chieftains. De Courcy then built at Dundrum, seven miles south of Downpatrick, a strong Norman cast- le, with lofty tower, as a center of action against his opponents. In this he set the example which we shall find followed by the Norman chiefs, who thus gained an im- mense advantage over the Irish.

What do you expect at this hotel— mother's cookin' and poonin'—

94. HENRY SENDS HIS SON JOHN TO IRELAND. By 1185, such disquieting reports of the state of Leinster reached King Henry that he determined to send over an ex- pedition under his nineteen-year-old son, Prince John. The prince, bear- ing the title of Lord of Ireland, set out from England with a large com- pany of adventurers. He landed at Waterford, where certain of the Irish chiefs had come to welcome him. Far from conciliating the chief- tains, John and his companions spent eight months adding fuel to the flames, by their insulting man- ner and lawless behavior toward Irish chiefs and people. The indig- nant once more to attack the Nor- mans, and succeeded in capturing a number of the recently built castles, and in completely routing Prince John's army. The chief leader of this war was Donall O'Brien of Tho- mond. King Henry was thoroughly disgusted with his son's failure, and ordered him to return, naming De Dourey as lord Lieutenant of Ire- land.

In Prince John's train there had been a certain Welsh priest, Gerald Barry, called in Latin, Giraldus Cam- brensis, that is, Gerald of Cambria, or Wales. This man, on his return to England, wrote a Latin history of the Norman invasion of Ireland, together with a description of the country, which contains much truth, mixed with many inaccuracies and fancies.

Prince John tried to cast all the blame for the failure of the expedi- tion on Hugh de Lacy, one of the best and wisest of the great Nor- man barons. This De Lacy, whose son was the rival of De Dourey, and brought upon himself the dangerous accusation of aiming to be king of Ireland, because he had married a daughter of Roderick O'Connor. He was assassinated one day by a young Irishman, to revenge his un- lawful seizure of land belonging to the old monastery of Durrow, found- ed by Saint Columba.

95. DE COURCY AS LORD LIEU- TENANT. During the whole time he was lord lieutenant, De Courcy was engaged in fighting. He began in 1198 by making an expedition against Connaught, much in the style of the old Danish raids, but was defeated with great loss by Con- nor, king of Connaught, and Donal O'Brien king of Munster, and forced to retreat. He marched north in the hope of escaping his pursuers, only to find himself caught between two hostile forces, as the prince of Tyr- connell, or Donegal, had also come out against him. He finally reached Leitner with the remnant of his army.

De Dourey's second expediton against the same province in 1200, as an ally of one of the native claim- ants to the disputed throne of Con- naught, likewise ended in defeat. Hugh de Lacy, the younger, had joined him in this campaign, but the presence of these two distinguished Norman leaders failed to secure suc- cess for their ally. Their army was caught in an ambushade by the forces of the rival claimant, and al- most annihilated. During their re- treat across the "waters of Lough Ree, the Connaught chief again at- tacked, and De Courcy escaped with only a few men.

De Lacy was lord justice, and therefore very jealous of De Courcy, and he did his utmost to bring the latter into disfavor with the king. In 1204, after much scheming, he succeeded in having De Courcy pro- claimed a traitor, and orders were given for his arrest. His subsequent history is uncertain.

SUMMARY.

In 1166, Dermot MacMurrough, king of Leitner, was deposed by Roderick O'Connor and others. He sought aid from Henry II, duke of the Normans, and his Norman bar- ons. The latter filled up several ex- peditions, landed in Ireland and cap- tured the towns of Werford and Wa- terford in 1169-70. Among these Norman barons were Fitzgerald, Fitzstephen, De Lacy, De Courcy, and the great Strongbow. Henry II came himself to Ireland in 1171, at the head of a large army received the submission of the chiefs, and re- turned, leaving De Lacy as governor of the city of Dublin. Strongbow was appointed lord lieutenant in 1173. These invaders were French- speaking Normans, who, just a cen- tury before, had conquered England, and who were now eager to enrich themselves from the spoils of Ire- land. With no other aim than plun- der they made numerous successful raids, through the country in spite of the opposition of Roderick and the Irish chiefs. Thus, by the year 1200, the Normans, had gained a footing in Ireland but had accom- plished nothing else.

PRODUCE GOOD JAG

(Special to Morning Press.)
COLUMBUS, Ind., Aug. 14.—The discovery here today by a local grocer that a number of small boys were saturating their handkerchiefs with gasoline from a tank which he kept in a shed in the rear of his store had led to a revelation that was startling.
Investigation disclosed that the boys were inhaling the fumes from the gasoline with which their handkerchiefs were saturated and thus making themselves drunk. They declare that their sensations when under the influence of the fumes is quite the same as those produced by a genuine jag which has been produced by intoxicating liquors.
At any rate, the practice of inhaling the fumes had spread to many boys, the discovery having first been made by some newsboys, who rapidly spread their knowledge and experience to numerous other boys until the practice has become so general and so popular among the small boys that the local officers have been asked to stop it.

It has been decided to make this tournament last four days. The big feature of the fourth day will be the races and contests between the horse teams and equipped companies.
The town is being decorated by two electrical companies and will be as light as day at night with more than 7,000 incandescents and brilliant arcs.

RECORD BEFORE

(Special to Morning Press.)
ATLANTA, Ga., Aug. 14.—Passengers who were on the Southern train wrecked near Bristol, Va., bring details of the bravery of Engineer Samuel Bush of Knoxville, who died as a result of his injuries. Bush was slowly and painfully working his way out of the wreck of his engine, scalded and frightfully bruised.
As the passengers began a hunt for whisky to stimulate him and were breaking open suitcases in their search Bush asked for a last look at his old engine, as hopeless a wreck as was his engineer. When they came to him with the liquor he begged them to look after the comfort of the passengers. Told that no passenger had been injured he said: "That's good. But before I take this whisky I want you men to smell my breath and testify it need be that I had not been drinking when this happened."
Although suffering horrible agonies, the brave engineer would not touch the stimulant until four of the men had smelled his breath promised to bear witness to his sobriety.
Bush leaves an estate of $100,000.

HAY FEVERITES ON PILGRIMAGE

The annual hay fever emigration has begun. Those who are troubled with this disease of annual recurrence are making their plans for trips to lake ports and districts where the pollen which is popularly supposed to provoke the disease does not exist.
The innocent golden rod, so admired by many, is now claimed to be the cause of hay fever.
In several cities there are regularly organized hay fever clubs.

PLAN DRY DOCK FOR PORTAGE LAKE

The recommendation that a dry dock of large capacity be located on Portage lake is made by Joseph Croze, the well known Houghton tug owner and mariner in a report to the United States by hydrographic office at Duluth.
That the tonnage passing through Portage lake warrants the erection of a large plant for drydock and shipbuilding purposes, is the opinion of Mr. Croze, and he has so reported to the hydrographic office in response to a request for data concerning conditions affecting the waterway.
The only drydock now at Portage lake is a small dock owned and operated by Mr. Croze, which is elevated by scows and can be used only by tugs and other small craft. This plant is 25 feet wide, 50 feet long and 10 1/2 feet on sides. It has a capacity of but 150 tons.

VESSEL IN PORT HURON
LOOKING FOR A MASTER

(Special to Morning Press.)
PORT HURON, Aug. 14. The gravel boat Pine Lake is lying at the foot of Court street, with everything necessary for a journey with the exception of a captain.
Capt. Brown, who has been sailing the boat for John McKechee, the owner, received a flattering offer to go as mate on a large steamer and he found it necessary to leave Port Huron immediately.
An effort is being made to dispose of the cargo of coal on the boat to Port Huron people to avoid taking it to Cheboygan.

TUGBOAT IN RACE TO AVOID FORECLOSURE

(Special to Morning Press.)
MENOMINEE, Mich., Aug. 14. The tug Togo has arrived in port after an exciting chase.
She has been pursued from Stockbridge to Oshkosh and from Oshkosh to Depeze, and not until it was safe within the friendly harbor of Menominee did its owner, Capt. Scott, draw an easy breath.
It appears that Albert Seal of Duluth has a mortgage on the Togo, and when Capt. Scott took the boat to Stockbridge to do coal freighting he left the jurisdiction of Green Bay waters and gave the mortgagee an opportunity to foreclose.

FAIRBAIRN NOW
GENERAL MANAGER

Charles T. Fairbairn, manager of the Lake Superior iron mines of the Republic Iron & Steel company, has been promoted to the position of general manager. The company has iron mines in the south and coal mines in the east, in addition to its several Lake Superior properties, and Mr. Fairbairn will have charge of all of them. His new duties will take him to Pittsburgh, where he will take up his residence the first of the month. He has been located in Duluth for some time.
Mr. Fairbairn is one of the best known mining men in the Lake Superior district. He is particularly well known on the Marquette range where he started in the mining business under the late Captain William Oliver at the Nelson mine, more than twenty years ago.
After the Winthrop properties were closed down Mr. Fairbairn was appointed postmaster at Ishpeming a position he held until he accepted the Mesaba range management of the Jones & Laughlins properties, with headquarters at Virginia. He held this position until less than three years ago, when he accepted the management of the Republic Iron & Steel company's Lake Superior properties, succeeding Alex ander Maltland.
The Republic Iron & Steel company's Lake Superior holdings have increased during the time Mr. Fairbairn has been at the head of the mining department.
It is not announced who is to succeed Mr. Fairbairn as manager of the company's Lake Superior properties, but it is thought that F. J. Webb, of Eveleth, will be the man.

STORY OF TRAGEDY THAT DESTROYED
HAPPY FAMILY

(Special to Morning Press.)
BARRON, Wis., Aug. 14.—Christ Hanson, who hung himself after cutting the throats of his wife and 14-year-old daughter was 53 years of age; William, the oldest son, is 22; Hannah, oldest daughter, 19; Mollie, 17, and Magnus, youngest boy, 10.
A short time ago Hanson sold one of his farms near the city limits of Barron, worth $10,000, for $5,500, against the wishes of his wife and children.
Hanson owned another good farm three miles north of Barron, at which place all the children except the youngest were berrying at the time of the tragedy.
When the children left home Hanson had about two hours work raking hay, after which he evidently went to the barn where his 11-year-old Esther, his pet, followed him.
He cut her throat, after knocking her down with a hammer, and laid her body in one of the stalls. He then went to the house, knocked his wife on the forehead with the same hammer and cut her throat.
He then went back to the barn and hung himself in the peak of the hay mow. After killing his wife he laid the hammer and razor beside her.
Hannah, Mollie and Magnus arrived home about 10 o'clock and the first they knew of the tragedy was when they stumbled over the dead body of their mother.

THEATRICAL NOTES

The Lincoln theater management in offering for the edification of its patrons the beautiful and striking Kalem picture "The Japanese Invasion," disclaim all desire to enter the ranks of the "Jingoes." Believing fully in this glorious country and that its present greatness is only a suggestion of the greatness that will be ours in the years to come.
Knowing our relations with Japan are only of the most friendly nature and believing they will continue so for several years, this film is offered, not as a war scare, but as a pleasing exhibition of military skill woven into a story form only to make it more attractive.
At the same time it is believed a much needed note of warning is sounded against the defenseless condition of our Western coast. This sensational picture is shown in nine scenes taken in Japan and southern California. The Japanese General Noki and the American General Wayne are central figures, but as is to be expected the Stars and Stripes are waving at the finish.
Other feature pictures will be shown, the Lincoln offering a complete change of program today, including a new illustrated song.

At these encampments the Indians return once more to their native state. Wigwams are erected in a circle, in the center of which is located the Indian chapel, where religious services are held in case of inclement weather.

Some Men Will Smile, and Some Frown, But Their Recollections
Are Much the Same.

They do say that one of the things a fellow remembers is the first time he ever went courting a girl. And it is one of the last things he wants to forget, even if she turned him down later on.
It is not the trial now that it was back in the good old days. In the country districts folks lived in houses of one or two rooms, or three at most, so that when a fellow went sparking he had to face the whole family, and you may depend upon it that the whole family faced him. Sometimes they didn't try to make life pleasant for him. This was especially true of the girl's younger brothers and sisters.
Do you remember how big your feet felt, and the trouble you had to find places for your hands, and how difficult it was to keep up a conversation? But if you had grit enough you would stay or die right there.
But you never forgot it, and you never will. Nor will you ever quite forget the effort necessary to get your courage up to the point of asking her if you might call on her, nor how glad some you were if she said you might, nor how mean you felt if she refused your request. As a frog beat the June affair of '59.
