PLANS ELABORATE FOR NAHMA AFFAIR

Elaborate arrangements are being made by residents of Nahma for the minstrel which is to be given at that village on Monday evening. John Gelley of this city is staging the affair and promises that Nahma people will be presented with something entirely out of the ordinary. The show will be followed by a dance.

A quartet made up of Compher, Trottler, Chatfield and Kelley of Escanaba, will furnish some numbers for the affair while the Olmsted orchestra of this city will furnish the musical program for the minstrel show and the dance following.

Pryal, of the recount board, announced their decision yesterday morning that under the interpretation of the law as it had been given them, the words "for mayor" printed on the Smith slips were contrary to law. The cross made on those slips, instead of in the regular blank space of the ballots, was held under the law, to be a distinguishing mark. It was also held by the aldermen that according to their understanding and intent of the law no candidate could be voted for, legally, in two party columns. Usefulness of Gardens.

A writer in the Southern Woman's Magazine calls gardens "the solution for misspent leisure in childhood."

"There is great economic truth," she says, "at the bottom of the garden movement, and its value has been rec ognized long ago in European countries, which have brought about different forms of development. Austria established experimental gardens in its rural schools as far back as 1869. Switzerland, Germany and England have a garden course in their public schools, while France goes farther and maintains not only flower and vege-table gardens, but includes orchards, forestry and bee industry. The garden movement is of special significance in cities where large numbers of children are turned out on the streets to lolter tease and maraud. When the welfare workers and educators fully realize the far-reaching value of this movement it will spread like wildfire over the coun-

It is remarked that the school gar den movement in this country had its beginning in Boston, but that Cleve-land's school board has given it per-haps the greatest impetus. As the re-suit of it there are said to be 50,000 home gardens in Gleveland.

New York, April 10.-A dispatch from Zurich to The Times says that Count Julian Andrassy, famous Hungarian statesman, has just written to book called Considerations on the Origin of the War, in which, while ardently supporting the cause of his country, he brushes aside with contempt the charges being made against England in Germany and Austria-Hun-

Not only does Count Andrassy deny that commercial motives prompted Great Britain to take part in the war, but he takes pains at great length to assert that if self-interest alone were the standard for her conduct. Great Britain would be fighting side by side with Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Turkey instead of against them.

He confesses himself incapable of understanding the motives which, as he thinks, contrary to every interest of Great Britain, induced Premier Asquith and Sir Edward Grey to side with Russia and France. New Cash Business

After a long consideration, we have decided to make a change in our business in the very near future and go on strictly cash basis and give our customers the benefit of the change by selling our goods on a smaller margin for eash. Trusting that our change will meet with your approval, and that we will have the pleasure to_ continue selling you your groceries, as you, the consumer is the one to pay the cost of doing business. Mistakes in trading are charged up to the cost of doing business. Who pays it? You.

The merchant who uses old fashloned methods, who keeps an unnecessary number of expenieve delivery teams lonfing at the back door half the time, who is continually standing petty losses from his credit accounts, whee slipshod system allows some goods to go out without being charged, while other goods spoil or get shopworn in the stock-room, that merchant means to give you service. Fut is it service! Isn't it just unnecessary expense which he puts on your bills? Common sense methods eliminate this useless expense. It puts new, fresh merchandise in your house at the lowest possible cost, and you save the difference,

When you call up ou telephone, No. 114 we will prove to you that our groceries are a standard quality Or butter and eggs are the best that the narket car produce and our cash prices so uch lower that you can figure many follars in savings each week and month you buy from us.

If you wil call affour store when we start our eash business, we wil convince you that this is the place to buy your groceries.

We hope that you will remain with us in our new enterprise.

Our Store Will Be Closed Monday and Tuesday. Our Opening Will Be Announced Later.

By special arrangement for this paper a photo-drama corresponding to the installments of "Runaway June" may now be seen at the leading moving picture theaters. By arrangement made with the Mutual Film Corporation it is not only possible to read "Runaway June" each week, but also afterward to see moving pictures illustrating our story

SECOND EPISODE. In Pursuit of the Runaway Bride

CHAPTER I. HE runaway bride, who led the chase, seemed to be lucky, for the traffic opened before ber like magic and closed behind her like a wall. As she turned into Central park at Fifty-ninth street, safe from immediate pursuit, the black Vandyked man's car was in a snart at Fifth-sixth. As he came out of that pocket he leaned forward, after a look ahead, and spoke crisply to his driver They stopped at the Plaza hotel, and the man, hurrying up the steps, sud denly paused. With a smile be drew from his pocket a tiny gold watch and opened it. Inside the lid was the pic ture of a beautiful young girl with a handsome collie. The black Vandyked man gazed at the picture for a mo ment in frowning meditation. It was the runaway bride

As he entered the hotel Ned's taxt with the fluttering white ribbons, pass' ed and turned into the park just as June Warner turned out of it at Sev enty-second street, heading for River side drive.

At that hour Iris Blethering sat pour ing ber voluble sadness into the ears of Bobble in the Blethering home on Riverside drive. She had been school day chum and the bosom friend of June Moore, but now there was no June Moore, only a June Warner, and June Warner might become a stranger "Rot," observed Bobble, "How long are they going to be gone?" "Three weeks. It's an eternity, Bob

"Rot," said Bobbie, "Why doesn't somebody answer that doorbell?" It had only just rung, and immedi ately the bollow Blethering butler came through. He did not return to announce any one, however. Instead the caller rushed straight in and threw berself into the arms of Iris.

"June!" Bobble Blethering stood by and watched the tableau for a moment; then he went to the door and looked out. "Where's Ned?" he quite naturally inquired. The only answer was a sob.

"Junie," pleaded Iris, "where's "I-I-I left Ned!" June wailed, say he gave you money?" "Yes." June straightened up as she recognized the difficulty which my be fore her. Irls, while a warm and loyar friend, was not exactly a thoughtful person nor a sensitive one and might perhaps not understand the deep eth ical significance of what had happened Bobbie didn't count.

"Just after the wedding breakfast mother gave me a purse, and it I had not left that on the library table at bome I might not have known my predicament until it was too late. When Ned and I were on the train, however I missed the purse. While I was tell ing Ned about it he tipped the porte:

dollar in his nice, cheery way; then he turned around and gave me $30-in just the same way! Don't you see?" And she shuddered with the recollection of her humiliation. "Then I had a dream," went on June, with more vigor, bound now to make them understand. "I saw myself being paid for being a wife, as mummy pays the servants and Ned pays his stenogra pher. I saw Ned giving me money as be gives it to beggars! I saw myself always holding out my hand for chari ty!" And she was a most pathetic lit tle figure as she upturned her palm "I couldn't stand it. So I threw down the $30 and slipped off the train and came back."

"But you had no money!" said Iris. "I got on the train anyhow and sold my watch to a funny old lady," June explained. She paused to remember something-the black Vandyked knau who now had ber watch. He had bought it from the old lady on the train, so that June could some day redeem it. That was very nice of bim

He Caught Up the Portrait and Press ed It to His Lips.

She had his card and was reaching for to the telephone.

"You mustn't telephone anybody!" the runaway bride insisted. "You would be betraying my confidence." "But what do you intend to do?"

"What about Ned?" Bobble suddenly blurted, the thought of young Warner, alone on the train with the honeymoon luggage, flashing on bis mind

"Ned's a darling!" And June's lip quivered. "He's an angel! But I cannot be a burden to be carried on Ned's back. I shall stay away from Ned until I achieve my own independence. Then we can walk together hand in hand-in mutual self respect and accepting from each other pothing but "It is for his happiness as well as for mine," June insisted firmly. "The world will not be happy until women walk in strict equality with men, Iris. dear." She saw by the face of her friend that cold logic was wasted. The two girls walked upstairs, and Iris ushered her still bosom friend into a cozy little guest room.

Meanwhile Ned Warner began to be familiar with the bronze panther on the overhanging rock in the park and, casting back in his memory, reflected that he must have passed it about five

But why had June married him? Why had she walked down the aişle of the Brynport chapel with him that morning? Perhaps the black Vandyked man was married, and marriage was the only road to June's freedom. He could stand this train of thoughts no longer. He whirled up Riverside drive, past the very house where June was then talking to Iris and turned his key in the lock of the place which was to have been home. Home! And this was his return! Here were all the furnishings which they had bought together. Here had clustered all his dreams of happiness. It must be his task to find that man! June was still June-and his June; He caught up the portrait and pressed it to his lips and held it in his arms and sank down by the bed sobbing At that moment June and Iris were sitting in the big walnut paneled fi brary, and Bobble wandered in When he saw the girls be started back

"Don't go, Bobble!" called Iris, She walked straight up to him and held out her hand. "Produce!"

"What's the price?" he asked. "Oh, a hundred."

"How did you guess my roll?" inquired the cheerful Bobble, dragging up a bandful of bills with nonchalant ease, at which June smiled in spite of ner embarrassment. She bad always been amused at the matter of fact and open way in which these two discussed finances. Bobble counted his money and beld back a fragment of it. "Here's your hundred, and I'm seven to the good."

"Ohl" gasped June as the signifi-cance of the tableau suddenly dawned upon her. Why, they were almost in the same position in which she had seen herself when she was Ned's piteous little beggar.

"Thanks, Bobbie," said Iris and turned to June. "If you want more, honey, in your struggle for independence. come right back, and I'll make Bobble give it to us."

June shrank away. "Oh, I can't possibly take it! I didn't know you were going to ask Bobbje!"

"Where else do I get it?" blurted the bosom friend. "Bobbie's the easiest way."

"That's just it," June pointed out. "Can't you see what a beggar a dependent woman is? Don't you see that if I can't accept a gift of money from my husband I can't possibly let you accept for me a gift of money from your husband? Don't be angry. Iris, please, I'm fighting for a princi-

"Oh, Mr. Thomas Rot!" exploded Bobble.

"That attitude is at the bottom of the whole thing, Bobble," argued June, with spirit. "Because the man has supported the woman for ages he has made himself the master. That destroys the woman's self respect, and

"She's a fine kid," said Bobble heartily. "but if she's going to draw the line on money which has been handed from a man to a woman she'll have to get it fresh from the mint." "What will you do, June?" fretted

"If I only had that purse mummy gave me," mused June. "She got that from your father,' Bobble was unkind enough to remind

"Oh, that was daddy's money," she brightly replied, no trace of concern on her brow, "and it's the last I can take from them now that I'm married. Iris, couldn't you go out to the house and say you'll send it to me?"

"Just the thing!" Iris was bubbling immediately with enthusiasm. "We'l go right out now. Bobble, call the car. "You mustn't let them know I'm here," warned June. "You mustn't let any one know!"

Within five minutes Iris and Bobble in the swift little runabout were bend ed for Brynport. In the library June had found a picture of Ned among some other intimate photographs, and it was with constant reference to this and amid constant talking to it and constant caressing of it that she penned her important message:

My Poor, Dear Boy-I cannot explain in a letter what happened today. When I am free, dear Ned, I will make you understand and forgive. You must not try to find your unhappy bride, JUNE

CHAPTER II.

UNT DEBBY came around the corner of the Moore house in shoes and blue stockings.

"Howdy, Aunt Debby!" Bobble Bleth ering, with his chattel beside him swung up the drive in his fast little runa bout.

June's parents came to the door John J. Moore in the blue and tan smoking jacket which he had refused to wear until tenderness at June's approaching departure had brought him to it, and Charlotte Moore in the gray silk dress embroidered by June's own

"Come right in," heartly invited Fa ther Moore, and Mother Moore, with soft eyes, shook Bobble by one hand and Iris by both.

"We have only a minute to stay," began Iris, starting to talk as they went into the library. "I heard from June," Iris rattled on. Father Moore, in the parlor, came straight over.

"She missed her purse," glibly went on Iris, while Bobble eyed her with admiration. "She's afraid she lost it Did she leave it here?" "Right on that table." And Mrs.

Moore's eyes sparkled. She took it from a drawer in a desk. "That girl always was careless about money," laughed Mr. Moore as if it were a virtue. Bobble glanced at Iris. She was as serene as a plate of ice cream. "I'll send it to her," offered Iris, and Mrs. Moore smilingly put it in her

"Why didn't June wire us?" puzzled father, his fists bulging in the pockets of his gay smoking jacket.

"Yes, why didn't she?" Mother's voice was full of anxiety, but as she saw the unruffled expression of Iris Blethering's face she began to bridle. If Junie could wire her friend, why couldn't she wire her mother?

"You have such slow delivery out here," promptly explained Iris. · "Just what did she say?"

Iris cast her eyes to the celling and began telling off the words on her fin "Phone mother I can't find my purse but they did not notice it. Ned War per was in the taxi, and he was out and up on the porch before the ma chine had come to a full stop. John Moore answered the bell, and he stood as if petrified when he saw his son in law's expression. "Have you heard from June?" husk-

"Then she isn't here?" gasped Ned. "Come inside." John Moore's voice had lost all its color. He led the way into the library. "Now, what is all this about? Why are you here alone?" "I don't know. June is somewhere in New York. I was in hopes you had heard from her."

"We did! She telegraphed to Iri that she had lost her purse. Iris left here with it to mail it to June."

"Then that's where she is!" was relief in Ned's voice. "Sit down," said Moore. "Why are you not with her?" "I don't know." There was a choke in Ned's voice. "She left me on the train-slipped away at Farnville."

"She wouldn't do such a thing without good cause!" declared Mrs. Moore with firm conviction.

"What happened?" This sharply from Moore.

"I don't understand. She told me she lost her purse. I gave her some mon ey, and she went to sleep with her head on my shoulder. I pillowed her more comfortably on the seat by and by and went into the smoker. I drop ped in to look at her about every five minutes, and when I came back after we had passed Farnville she was gone She left the money on the seat. Here it is." And he showed them the three crumpled bills, one partly torn.

"How do you know she returned to New York?" demanded Moore,

"I saw her. I got off at the next sta tion and telephoned. The station mas ter at Farnville reported that he saw her getting on a down train. I took an express and overhauled her as we came into the Grand Central station. I saw her leave the station and get into a taxi."

"You are holding something back!" Moore charged. "I want to know the

"You have all I can tell you," declar ed Ned. He would not tell them about the black Vandyked man, and June was Mrs. Warner now.

"Will you get your wraps, please Charlotte?" June's father fluxlly said and rose. "We are going to Iris 1'll order the car."

They were grim and silent as they sped away.

While they rode the black Vandyked man, in Sherry's, sat at the end of a long table between a joylal host with a gray mustache and a ponderous man with beavily iidded eyes and short There were a dozen placed at the table, and wine bissed at every plate but the others of the party, which in cluded a half dozen vivacious and gayly gowned young women, were dance ing. The three men talked in low tones, their heads bent together, and the black Vandyked man was the most silent. Finally he began to talk and grew enthusiastic, and presently he drew forth June's little gold watch runaway bride, their faces bent closttogether. They clapped the black Van dyked man on the shoulder.

It was during this time that June Warner, sitting quietly in a corner of the library with Bobble and Iris and with her mother's purse still in her chair in a flash and went upstairs to her room, pushed through ahead of the men. John Moore walked straight to Bob ble Blethering and shook an awe in spiring finger at that young man. "Where's my girl?" he demanded.

Ned laughed at her. There was no mistaking those dainty, blue embroidered bits of white kid.

"Now, I'll tell you," went on Ned. "This man, Gilbert Blye, whose name now know for the first time, was with her from the moment she left me until she came here. He is a tall, black Vandyked man, and at Farnville he was seen assisting June on the down train. I saw them myself through the car window talking together. I want to find Gilbert Blye! Are you hiding him too?' And he turned savagely on Iris.

Bobble lounged forward. "That'll do, Ned," he warned. "Iris, call June." "Junie!" They heard Iris throwing doors open and running through the house, calling June. Ned darted up the stairs, but in the hall Iris met him with a frightened face. "She is gone!" They all searched for her then, but there was no trace of her.

CHAPTER III.

RS. GILBERT BLYE was in shrill voiced converse with a big green parrot, which, from length and sharpness of nose and height of eye arches, might have been a sister to her. A maid announced that some one had wanted to see Mr. Blye, and, since he was not at home. would Mrs. Blye care to say where he was? He came to New York on an early train.

Mrs. Blye rose instantly. She salled straight into the hall and confronted

She had called her husband's club, and they heard her ex-"Where's Junie?" Mrs. Moore had claim indignantly, "Where, Sherry's?" She was back, blazing. She had her hat in her hand. "He's at Sherry's!" she shrilled.

An electric coupe stood at the door She slammed into that, turned on the lights and rolled away with as much vigor as was in the capacity of her machine. Bobble's runabout darted after her and passed her and then came the limousine with Mr. and Mrs

Moore and Ned. Poor June! It had been hard for her to leave those beloved voices down there in the library, but she had made up her mind very firmly that neither she nor Ned could be happy if she was always to feel that she was a chattel. She ran back to the desk for Ned's photograph, then stepped lightly out on the tiny side porch, jumped down to the little embankment and fled, as light as thistledown, along the side of the house and out at the little grocer's

In fond memory, stopping at the first dark corner, she went over each dashed around the circle. of the dear rooms, furnished just to fit her and delight her-the white and gold reception room, the white and rose drawing room, the white and black library, the white and blue bedroom, the all white kitchen. She saw Ned in every room and berself there. Now flushed and happy she was experimenting with the toy range, now they were dining together all alone. She was playfully feeding Ned, and done gone: Mr. Bobble and Miss Iris he was seasoning the meal with stolen tisses, walking clear around the table to get them. They were spending an evening of blissful companionship in the library.

She suddenly held her handkerchief to her mouth to choke back a sob. On sharp eyes. Broadway she halled a passing taxi. | "Say!" shrilled the occupant of the

All was sparkling at Sherry's, but Gilbert Blye had taken small share in stomach, pointed down the road. the bilarity. He had risen to go when a black eyed young woman, the most ! vivacious of the party, called him to task for his evening of secret scheming. "You're up to some devilment," she charged, playfully tweaking his beard. "Come and dance with me."

"Sorry, Tommy," he told her, with that queer smile on his lips, "but I've a previous engagement."

"She can wait," pouted the girl. She dragged Blye away from the table.

"Take my car, Gill" called the gray mustached host. "Certainly," replied Blye, and the three men exchanged a smile. Jf-l'll dance one round with Tommy; then I'll go." Before that round was over, however, Gilbert Blye saw an apparition in the doorway, and his face furned cold. The apparition was a tall, angular woman with a long, high nose and high arched brows, who was trying to bore Gilbert Blye through and through with a double eyed glare of burning ferocity. He hurried over to his wife. She had shrilled:

"Who is that woman?" One lean, long finger pointed accusingly at the vivacious black eyed girl with whom Gil had been dancing.

"I shall explain nothing," said Gil bert. "I'm through!"

He left her contemptuously, leaving ber stunned by this unexpected revolt. As he went down the steps he heard her shricking something after him, and he hurried. As he dashed out of the door he ran into a group who were coming in. They were the Moores, the Bletherings and Ned Warner, and he was upon them and past them and jumping into the luxuriously furnished racing limousine, with the little watch in his hand, before they realized that this was the man they were seeking.

scoundrel!" Blye, moving rapidly away, saw the confusion and blamed his wife for the scene, for now she was in the lead of the excited group, which was rush ing toward him.

"There he goes!" cried Ned. "The

The house of the Moores at Bryp port was dark when June arrived, the dear old house. It stood back amid the dim trees, with a dignity and beauty which she had never before thoroughly appreciated, and at the gate she hesitated as if, with no one to welcome her, she had no right here. There was a welcome, though, and a joyous one, a loud, hearty one, a se-

FLYING DUTCHMAN

Otto Raddaz, the "flying German" walker, will this evening contest in one of the hardest races ever arranged at the local skating rink. Raddaz will walk and push a wheel barrow for 30 laps, while Edward Beurbe is skating 60 laps. The course has been especially arranged for the race this evening.

Who walks at the Peterson rink this evening

On Wednesday night Raddax was lefeated by Beurbe but the German did not wheel a wheelbarrow on this occasion. The race of this evening is a decidedly difficult one and should be witnessed by scores of local peo-
