ITALIAN CABINET GIVEN FULL POWER TO ACT IN CASE OF

WAR

BULLETIN

Rome, May 20 .- Premier Salandra, speaking in the Chamber of Deputies, stated that this Government has retorce of arms.

Deputies tonight passed, amid scenes of tremendous enthusiasm, a bill proposed by Premier Salandra, containing one article, conferring full powers on the cabinet to make war. The note was 517 to 73. This is considered a vote in favor if war for which the Government has made all prepara-

Among the wonderful scenes n this thrilling play are the chase of the cossacks across a Siberian ice field—the plunge of a horseman into a fissure in the frozen river. But after all these are incidents. The great heart interest of the play centers about the tragic figure of a woman lawfully wedded to two men and pursued by an agent of the Russian police.

THE FORGOTTEN WORD

By VICTOR RADCLIFFE.

(Copyright, 1914, by W. G. Chapman.) "The word, sir?"

"Ha-hum! I declare!"

The challenge, sharp and suspicious came through a tiny slot in a doo that seemed to guard a lodge room or some like secret place of convoca tion. The embarrassed response was from Prof. Achilles Dabney, savant and student of antiquity:

"I-how awkward! You see-dear me! how could I forget so readily? have lost the word."

Snap! went the fealously gnarded slot cover, but the professor beat has tily and peremptorily on the door, and to him, the evil eye again an peared at the orifice.

"I have come pearly five hundred miles," fluttered the professor excited ly and with eagerness "I am Professor Achfiles Dabney. Surely, you have heard of me? I am deeply interested in the discovery of the great connect ing link your illustrious society has on exhibition "

"Sorry, sir, but only to members of the Anthropological Assembly, or hose accredited by some officer of the same, is admission granted, provided they have the password."

Professor Dabney groaned audibly as he left the place. All his thoughts were bent upon devising same way of getting in among the scientists. He racked his brain for a suggestion of some method of encompassing the great desire of his heart. In his abstraction, crossing a crowded thoroughfare, he jumped two feet up into the air at the sharply yelled words "Hi, there-out of the way!"

"Mercy me!" gasped the professor as the teamster's horses nearly bore

"Look out!" came a second startling Injunction, and the professor faced the new dilemma of a speeding automobile coming from the other direction.

Directly in front of him was a titwas directly in the course of the onchild. Just in time he pushed her out of the way of the crushing wheels of by the edge of the machine, and reached the curb, where a policeman was trying to sooth the crying, fright

The tired scientist glanced about the bright, cheery room. His gracious reception had warmed his heart. All his wealth and prestige, his lonely, selfish life faded into nothingness before the intensely human and inspiring influences of this neat little home nest. The little one insisted on his staying to lunch. He arose to go, after the happiest hour of his life, and he thrilled as the hand of Miss Weston rested in his own at parting

It was just at dusk when there came a knock at the door of the little flat. Rhoda Weston looked glad and pleased as she welcomed the professor. He seemed supremely happy.

"I had to come back to apologize for my rude departure," he exclaimed. "but you see that name, your name, Rhoda, by a strange coincidence, happened to be the password at that scientific assembly I told you about." "Why, I am very glad to know that your great desire was met," said

"Tell me some more about those cunning little red ants," pleaded Idaline climbing into his lap.

"Then why not do so?" she smiled

encouragingly. "One word, a lost word, discovered through you, did me great service, said the professor, "and you have en abled me also to find and understand

"And that?" interrogated Rhoda, still iling, but trembling all over.

FACT AND FANCY

Marie was a street singer, but Marie had dreams. While she sang for pen nies and dimes that were tossed to her from the windows of apartment houses she fancled herself a grand opera singer bowing gracefully before a great audience of music lovers. As she glanced from time to time at Lecco, the young Greek who was her accompanist, and who turned the hand organ mechanically, Marie fancied him to be a great and wonderful conductor waving his baton and carrying her rhythmically through her operatio

The afternoon upon which Marie and Lecco stopped before the studio apartments on West Fifty-seventh street was fraught with much excitement and interest for both the Greek and the little singer from Italy.

Before leaving, Marie had promised John Orth to return the following day to receive instructions preparatory to beginning a course of study in vocal and instrumental music. Also they had been taken into the diningroom, where Orth's servants offered them tea and cakes such as would make the mouths of less hungry people water.

When they had finally left the studio John Orth sat in deep study. His guests, now that the tense moments were slipping into the past, began to chide him.

Doucet, for example, made a spe cialty of three-piece suits, a few long coats and many short ones, which had a slightly empire waist line. Midnight blue and old rose were the colors used. Many of his best evening frocks were black, made of lace and jet and of quantities of tulle.

Every- WINNERS MUST DEFEND where one saw draperies of tulle flowing from the shoulder to the hem in pire waist line, very much like those Josephine wore, with the huge ornaskirt lines of plain satin.

Cheruit held her clientele firmly. Her collection is said to be as artistic and as likable as those she made in would feel quite sure that she would go toward mauve and simplicity. Callot is ornate; Cheruit is simple. It is argued by her admirers that the styles she has shown this season will outlast the moment because they are not founded on freakishness, but seriousness of line and coloring. They are Parisian and suggest the reign of Louis XV, of which she is a student and an admirer, and there is also a touch of Louis Philippe.

AVIATION CORPS

Most American followers of boxing have always had an idea that Georges Carpentier, heavyweight champion of Europe and great idol in the history of Europe and greatest idol in the history of French sports, has every qualification of a boxing champion with the exception of gameness.

This was particularly impressed on their minds when he quit to Bill Papke, the former world's middleweight champion, in 17 rounds in Paris a few years ago. However, this idea has been proved false since the great European war started. Carpentier's record in the big struggle has shown him to be a man of unusual courage During the early months of the war Carpentler was used as a messenger. The work of being a "chauffeur in the sky" is the most hazardous of any duty that a soldier can perform. Even in times of peace an air pilot is always in danger of death, but in war times the dangers of losing his life are multiplied.

It is the latest edition of the Daily Mail of Paris that conveys news of Carpentier's new duties. A picture is shown of him taking his first fight in an aeroplane. He is dressed in an overcoat, with fur collar and a round fur hat. The old smile that used to piay around his features when he was performing in the ring before thousands of French admirers has vanished and in its place is the thoughtful, sad, expression that is furrowed on the faces of all men in times of war.

If Carpentier's life is spared, and the warring nations lay down their aims, he will probably become one of part of the city. the most prominent figures in Europe, and it would be no surprise if the French government conferred some high official honors upon him-maybe some big job in the employment of the

POLICE RAID RAILROAD YARD

The police department declared war on the hoboes residing in NorthWestern box cars, last night and in the first attack, took 10 of the vagrants prisoners. The tramps were lined up by the officers and marched to the police station where they will be kept until this morning when they will be arraigned in police court.

In all probability the bums will be taken to the city limits this morning and given a boost on their way out of this district.

Years Are a Measure of your business progress and earning capacity. One young man of our acquaintance started a Savings Account here three years ago. The first year he banked and saved but twenty-two dollars. The next year he save over sixty. This last year, with a better paying position, he saved two hundred. He has solved the problem of independence with his bank-book.
