WILL BATTLE LOCALS HERE TOMORROW.

Coach Hutto will this afternoon give the finishing touches of the training of the band of high school gridiron warriors who tomorrow will carry Escanaba's colors against Menominee in the annual clash between the two teams, at South Park.

in spite of other games on the scheaule the training of the locals, throughout the season, has been pointed toward the Menominee game as it is in that annual battle that the major footba't interest of the city is centered. For the past several seasons Mcnominee has been able to trim local teams by decisive scores and it is the memory of past defeat that tomorrow FIRE SWEEPS SCHOOL OF PEA- board. will spur the wearers of the orange and black, to the supreme effort of their football career.

For two weeks the locals have been held from participating in any important games that injuries to the eleven's chief ground gainers might not be risked. Every member of the team today is in perfect condition and if Escanaba is defeated on Saturday it will not be because of the lack of conditioning on the part of the players. Several plays, on which the coach and his protegees have been working since first practice of the fall will be sprung tomorrow for the first time, as were resigned especially for the purpose of defeating Menominee and were not pulled out of the trick box in any of the previous games. THE DEAD MAN'S WILL

By HAROLD CARTER.

Seton Manning found that he had not solved the problem of death by dying, any more than he had solved that of life by living; but after the first shock of the change had passed away he was conscious that in certain ways he had acquired increased per-

Particularly in this: that whereas in earth life he had only read the past, now he could read the future also. He saw the shadows cast upon the screen of time, as events ripened and destiny prepared itself.

But since man has free will, nothing was actually foredestined that could not be changed. It afforded Manning infinite amusement to watch these phantom episodes prepare themselves only to scatter before the will of their

Naturally, Manning's first though was for his own. He projected him self by power of will to the scene of his earthly home. He saw the stately old house where he had lived so many years, the arbiter of the small town so ciety, with his adopted daughter Leils He glanced wistfully at the old place and, though the remembrance was dir and dreamlike, he was conscious of a intense longing to be back again the earth life.

But when he sought for Leila l could not find her anywhere about th old place, and there were strange, u known faces there. It was not un he had concentrated all his will in supreme effort that he found Leil She was dressed simply in black, i Manning had been dead only a mont and she was seated in a parlor of second-class boarding house, listeni to a fussy, elderly gentleman who dressed her.

"You see, Miss Lella, the will v invalidated by the fact that your be factor wrote of you as 'my dau ter," the lawyer explained. "I to Mr. Manning that he would have draw up another will, because phrase was incorrect, but he did do so, and consequently the prope passed to his brother."

The old man had watched her with secret remorse. He had gone quietly away and made a new will, leaving everything unconditionally to Leila. He knew that he had not long to live, Wolverine & Arizona 1.75 and he meant her to marry her lover. He had the will witnessed at the little country hotel which he frequented, a hundred miles away in the mountains, and he left it in the drawer of an old desk there which he used. In the astral realm matter is so plastic that there one becomes and creates anything one wants to. No sooner had Manning willed Leila to discover the will than the whole sequence of events unrolled before his eyes. The inn-keeper discovered the document, learned the identity of the signer, and hurried into the town to apprize Leila's lawyer. There followed a bitter quarrel over the validity of the will, after which Leila found herself again in possession of the es-

In their old age the poorhouse received Lella and Tom, and their children grew up ignorant of their parents' names.

That wouldn't do. Manning swept the whole cobwebby structure away. There must be a better fate for Lella. For days he haunted her, trying to tell her that the will was in the desk, but each time that he got in touch with her mind the scene arose again upon the screen of time. And then Manning realized that it was best that Lella should never know.

One evening he projected himself into the shabby parlor, to discover Lella seated tete-a-tete with a young man-Carden Hughes. Their chairs again. were drawn up very close, and their hands were interlinked.

Rose Vines Beautifying This Home.

THE BEAUTY OF VINES

By JOSEPHINE DE MARR. When in doubt as to what to plant, plant vines, is sound advice. Vines beautify; they are useful; they are easy to grow; they shade from the hot sun; they hide old or obnoxious features; they encourage the birds to nest about the house; they are the drapery nature throws over and about with a lavish hand to soften and em-

When preparing to plant vines be sure to spade deeply, manure heavily, and prepare the soil carefully. After perennial or hardy vines are established, it is difficult to cultivate them, therefore, do all you can before planting them. When they begin to spin they must have supports, otherwise they will be stunted in growth and unsatisfactory.

There are so many beautiful vines among annuals, perennials and hardy vines that it is hard to decide, if the choice is at all restricted: If you wish to blot out an old building, cover it with vines. If you dislike the necessary fence, turn it into a thing of beauty by planting vines along its length.

A dead tree renews its youth if vines are allowed to clothe its branches. Let vines shade the porch and thus make it a cool and leafy retreat from the summer's sun. Curtain the shutterless south window with vines and let them grow about the home wherever

The grape is one of the most use ful vines. It is hardy; early in spring its leaves are ready to cast a shadow. Its blossoms are delicately fragrant, and its fruit is delicious. Attention must be given it in the way of fertility, pruning and tying.

Among wild vines the trumpet vine, tecoma radicans, wild clematis, (virgin's bower) and bitter-sweet are popular. In transplanting the latter from the woods, be sure your procure one that is fertile, for some of them do not bloom. The Dutchman's pipe is another desirable wild vine, but it is not as common as those mentioned

The madeira vine, mignonettescented, has tuberous roots, which taining headquarters there. are not hardy, grows fast and forms a fine screen with its thick, fleshy army was described as a force The honeysuckles are desirable and popular on account of their many good qualities. They grow quickly, forming dense shade and are iron-clad as regards insects and disease. The various clematis are all beautiful and desirable climbers. It is not generally known that if clematis paniculata is severely cut back after flowering, it will form new wood which will bear fine flowers and many of them next season.

Ideal plants for covering brick, stone and rough surfaces, are the ampelor sis and hedena helix-the true European ivy. The latter prefers a northern exposure, as the alternating thawing and freezing of late winter is apt to kill it if grown where the sun

The ampelopsis, better known as the Boston ivy or Virginia creeper, is at all times beautiful. The tender growth in the spring is delicately shaded and in the fall the leaves are gorgeous in varicolored golds, crimsons and scarlet.

Morning glories, cypress pines, sweet peas, gourds, nasturtiums, Japanese hops, wild cucumber, hyacinth bean, are among our most desirable annual climbers. Seeds of them do not cost much, and a package of one or the other will yield shade, beauty and grace.

The Virginia creeper, honeysuckle, nasturtiums and moon vines are trailers rather than climbers. Of garden plants the sweet potato and the dewberry are genteel enough to be grown as trailers. They give edibles instead

Lady's Slipper Filled With Mignon Roses,

GROWING ONE'S OWN ROSE-BUDS

By L. M. BENNINGTON.

Nearly all hardy roses can be propagated by either rooting cuttings, or layering shoots of the half-spened freeze. growth of the previous summer.

This can be done at any time after flowering, but October is the season usually selected. If layering is chosen, the shoot should be bent down, and a slight cut made, slanting, into the wood at the bend, then the branch should be fastened down into the soil, and all the better if a stone or brick be aid over the buried bend

The soil about the bend should not allowed to dry out, and the plant should not be moved until the next fall, though, with care, it may be transplanted in the spring.

Cuttings 4 to 6 inches long from the half-ripened wood may be set in sand-clean, sharp river sand, is best -and this must be kept in a sunny. warm corner or window.

Usually, the cutting will be rooted sufficiently to transfer to pots in about six weeks to two months. Much depends upon the kind of rose, and the care given it, as some roses root more quickly than others. The sand must not be allowed to dry out or

When the roots are well started, the buds will begin to swell, and the new plants should be lifted carefully and potted in a soll made of equal parts of garden loam, leaf mold and clean sand, given a thorough watering, and the pots plunged in the soil of the cold frame, where the plants will not freeze. In the spring the little plants can be set in the border.

Cuttings may also be planted in a warm sunny spot in the garden, as in sand, and a fruit jar turned over them, pulling the soil up around the jar half its height and leaving until spring, keeping the soil up around the jar moist during the fall months.

These cuttings should not be lifted until the following fall, unless with the utmost care and plenty of soil about

WHEN KITTEN SNEEZED

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

Kitten had been put to bed. She was wide awake and fairly tingling with excitement, but officially it was understood that small persons under ten, even if they had been flower girls, should not remain up during the reception after the wedding.

And she had wanted to see all the presents laid out in the front suite upstairs, so very much. She sat up in bed and listened. Everyone was down on the first floor, in the long reception rooms. She slipped out into the hall, and peeped cautously over Aunt 'Stasia give explicit instru- Serbian army to the capital. tions to Jeanne not to leave the front suite during the entire evening.

Kitten didn't like Jeanne. She was maid and tried to induce Lenore to railroad between Negotin and Nish. take her away on the honeymoon.

"Why, mother, darling, I'd just as soon engage the obelisk," Lenore had Still, she had a great deal of respect for Jeanne, and tonight when she reached the front suite she was surprised to find it empty. It really was pleasant in a way to be undisturbed. She tiptoed about admiring gift after gift until all at once she heard something strange. It sounded like somebody outside on the long roof of the stucco veranda, somebody creeping along over the tiles.

Kitten never stopped to investigate. She just flopped right down on the floor and rolled under the bed out of sight. Downstairs they were dancing now. Kitten kept still, for Jeanne had come into the room and crossed to the window, where the noise came from. She unlatched the screen noiselessly, and a man climbed in. They spoke in French, and Kitten did not understand at all what was said, but Jeanne stood by the bed, so near she might have stepped on yellow curls almost, and the man was fingering the lavished kisses upon them. She said ewelry and silver.

startled. She listened at the door, and spoke in a whisper to the man. Then she opened a closet door, and he went in as she told him to.

When Kitten stuck her head out. Aunt 'Stasia was calling Jeanne, and she hurried away to answer. So, withut stopping to think much about it, Katherine-she was always Katherine on great occasions-just stepped over and turned the key in the closet door.

It was one of Jeanno's favorite punishments, this shutting persons away in closets and turning keys on them to keep them out of mischief, only she had not thought she would dare do it to a grownup. Only, of course, she had forgotten to turn the key. So Kitten did it for her. The doorknob turned cautiously, and again, and again, but the captor turned her shoulders away resolutely. Discipline had to be maintained somehow, and he certainly had been mussing up Lenore's presents awfully.

And then there came the sound of eet on the stairs, and laughing girl voices. Lenore was leading, holding up her white satin skirts about her as they chased her. It was time for the going away, and the one who unpinned the bridal veil would be the first married that year.

But when Lenore saw the dignified little figure in the white nightgown standing with her back against the closet door, she stopped short and gathered it in her arms.

Why, blessed Kitty Katherine, whatever is the matter?" she asked. "I've got him locked in here," said Kitten, firmly. "Until Jeanne comes back. He was going to take all our presents, I guess, Lenore." Lenore rose and looked about, her face paling. "Girls, call father and Andre, please," she said. "There's a burglar

At the door stood Jeanne, her dark eyes glowing, her lips compressed. Without a word, she took in the whole scene, and threw herself at the closet door, striking blindly at Lenore and the others. But there was no key in it. Some of them held Jeanne, who was sobbing hysterically, and Uncle Broderick ordered everyone downstairs. Outside the Kitten heard whistles blowing, and wondered what that was for, but perched high on Andre's shoulder, she gave up the key and allowed herself to be borne downstairs with the bride and bridesmaids and all the startled, white-faced throng of women and girls. "However did you do it, Kitty Katherine?" asked Lenore, after it was over, and the police had taken Jeanne away, and her tall, porch-climbing sweetheart. "You've saved all of my gifts for me, you wonderful mite. How Copenhagen, Oct. 28 .- The Danish overnment is taking steps to mine cal in Greenland more intensively. this is due t othe fact that it is diffiult now to buy English coal in Deu-The coal famine, in fact, is so crious here that the government is lanning to relieve the situation in nt fore ts. Steps are also being aken to increase the production of Coal has heretofore been mined in Greenland only in experimental way, but the deposits there, in the opinion of experts, are very extensive. The heating qualities of Greenland coal, however, are not regarded as equal to the English variety.

The government is also taking ew interest in the copper mines o his far northern colony, thinking that the mines are capable of more extensve development which would be profitable at the present time.
