MOB FAILS TO GET SUSPECTED SLAYER

Janesville, Wis., Nov. 9.—A plot by members of the Janesville Italian colony to storm the Rock county jail here and lynch Vincent Cornevale, "Jim the gunman," the 22 year old alleged murderer of Raffles Palmero in the yard of his home on the night of Oct. 26, was frustrated Wednesday night by detectives. A mob of fifty Italians, armed with a heavy oak railroad tie and a rope, was on its way to the jail when they were dispersed. The dead man's brother, Frank Palmero, his companion, Angelo Contano and Frank Golick, whom the police first suspected of the crime, and another Italian were leaders in the conspiracy. A mob of over fifty had congregated to avenge the death of Palmero, who had been the leader in the Italian colony here. Cornevale, Monday afternoon, confessed to shooting Palmero five times upon the advice and appeal of his mother-in-law, Mrs. William Boschi. On Wednesday he was arraigned in Municipal court and bound over to the March term of the Rock county Circuit court, and held without bail. A heavy guard has been thrown about the jail to prevent his lynching, should another uprising of the Italians occur.

The Married Life of Helen and Warren

Nora's Sullen Spells Are Most Trying, and Helen Decides to Let Her Go

(Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"It means a cool three thousand! Think I'll turn that down!" Helen did not answer. With tremulous fingers she was tearing at the margin of the "Final Extra" with its flaring war headlines. "There's no risk, I tell you," persisted Warren. "London's all right, and I'll be back in less than a month. Now, for heaven's sake, cut the hysteria. Business here is dead! I'm not making enough to pay the office rent. If I've got a chance like this—I'd be a chump not to take it." Helen swallowed hard at the lump in her throat. "I've got to hustle to meet Griffin at 8:30," glancing at his watch. "You'd better be getting my things together. That small steamer trunk to the storeroom?" She nodded. "Well, give me the storeroom key and I'll have the elevator boy bring it up. Get me an umbrella, will you? Drizzling when I came in." Helen got the key and the umbrella, and followed him to the door. As he took his hat from the hall rack he stooped to kiss her with a bribe. "Now, don't be silly. You ought to be deuced glad this offer came my way. Don't sit up for me. Griffin's going over the whole case tonight—only chance we'll have." And with a cheerful "So long," Warren stepped into the elevator. From the front room window Helen gazed down at the umbrella that came out and bobbed up the street. She was still dazed from the announcement he had made at dinner with such brutal abruptness. Mr. Griffin had today offered him $3,000 if he would make a rush trip to London to look after some interest in a stock company that had become involved since the war. Helen had heard the details only vaguely. "Sailing on the St. Paul tomorrow noon," was the part that had seared into her mind. Warren had taboored her fears. London was safe, perfectly safe, and he would be home in less than a month. Three thousand and all expenses paid—it was an offer to jump at.

A deafening thunder crash, a zig-zagged streak of lightning—and the rain came down in sheets. It was the climax, as it were, to her own terrifying thoughts. The curtains were soaked before her hands, weak with trembling, could put down the windows. Then, with her nerves still a-quiver, she hurried to answer a startling ring. What could it be? No one would call so late! It was the bellboy with the trunk. "Mr. Curtis said you wanted this up tonight." "Oh, yes, just—just take it in there—in the bedroom." With the lump tightening in her throat, Helen looked down at the trunk, which bore the labels of their London trip two years ago. She had been going with him then. She thought of all the joyous preparation for that trip! Now he was going alone—with all Europe at war! What might not happen? Her mind was filled with lurid pictures of possible dangers. How could he consider the money a compensation? Mechanically Helen unlocked the trunk. The tray was empty. Underneath were two steamer rugs, a shawl strap, a heavy trunk strap, Warren's traveling cap and an air pillow. Slowly she took out the things and scooped up the scattered mothballs. For a long time she knelt there, the rugs on her knee, fumbling with the balls she had thrown into the cap. Her breath came fast. Her hand clenched tight over the crumpling balls. Then she started up, threw the things on the bed, rushed out to the hall and rang peremptorily for the elevator. Not until the car shot up did she take her tense finger from the button. "There—there's another steamer trunk in the basement," breathlessly, "that Mr. Curtis forgot. We're sailing tomorrow, so I must pack tonight. Will you bring it up at once?" In a few moments the trunk was in her room. With a desperate, feverish haste she began to pack—Warren's trunk first and then her own. There was no hesitancy or uncertainty in her movements. Her usual indecision was swept away by a resolute decliniveness. Her tense excitement acted as a stimulant that urged her on. It was after twelve and she was crowding in her tray the last few things when she heard his key in the door. "Hello, you up yet? Take this, will you?" thrusting at her the dripping umbrella. Then as he entered his room: "Got the trunk packed? That's fine. Put in plenty of underwear? Don't know when I'll get any washing done." "I put in five suits," her voice misleadingly quiet; "that's all you have clean." "Ought to be enough. Phew, I'm tired," peeling off his coat and vast.

NATION ON WAY TO FEDERAL OWNERSHIP

Boston, Nov. 9.—"This country is moving steadily toward government ownership of railroads—not by the conscious choice of the people, but because a condition is created from which government ownership is the only way out."

Said Ivy L. Lee, former assistant to the president of the Pennsylvania road, speaking before the Melrose forum today.

"Our railroad facilities are wholly inadequate," continued Mr. Lee. "The year 1915 saw less railroad construction than any other year since the civil war. Today railroad managers though eager to go ahead with railroad development, are making only such improvements as are absolutely necessary to take care of business definitely in sight. Railroad managers are unable to make provisions for the needs of the future. They can't get the capital."

Newspapers talk of $20 coal in New York because there are not railroad facilities to haul enough coal to market. The interstate commerce commission is holding an inquiry into the acute nation-wide car shortage.

"Every dollar of money raised from investors for railroad construction this year has been from the sale of bonds. In the period since Jan. 1, 1915 only $12,910,520 in new money for railroad construction has been raised through the issuance of stock."

"The American people must have new railroad facilities; they can not, they will not, permit their commerce to be throttled by inadequate facilities. The sole factor, which will determine whether or not we are to drift into government ownership, will be whether we are going to be willing to allow the railroads to earn sufficient government ownership, will be whether we are going to be willing to allow the railroads to earn sufficient profits to attract private capital into the development of existing railroads and the building of new railroads. If not, government ownership is certain."

Man's Preference.
If woman only listened to men in their choice of clothes, they would always be "tailored" on the street and in public places in the afternoon. There is no uniform in which they appear that so pleases the masculine eye; but the trouble is that the American woman yields to the vagaries of fashions that are set for the French woman, and very often, and in great mass, loses her identity.
