

COUNCIL AGAIN CUTS CITY GAS RATES

UNRULY, BALKY CONGRESS HAS HURT HARDING

FUTURE DEPENDS ON RECORD OF NEXT TWO YEARS.

BY DAVID LAWRENCE. (Copyright, 1923, by The Escanaba Press) ORMOND, Fla. Mar. 6.—President Harding had his first day of retrospective thought on the trip down here, the first twenty hours away from official routine since last summer.

The president would part the curve of his administration abruptly downward for the autumn months following, of course, the simultaneous outbreak of a rail and coal strike with the many effects of each on industry and the household.

Probably the last man in the world to blame anybody else or shift responsibility for his own political mishaps is Warren G. Harding.

The defeat of the ship subsidy bill was a bitter pill to swallow. Not because of the merits of the proposal itself but because it proved that a republican president with a big majority in both houses could not secure the passage of a bill sponsored as an administration measure.

Mr. Harding feels, however, that his party had the votes but that the democrats, by virtue of the senate rules permitting unlimited debate, killed the shipping bill.

Whatever reflection one may indulge on the events of the last two months, whatever explanation may be made by the individual who dislike to look at adverse facts, the truth is the much dreaded insubordination which destroyed party solidarity in Mr. Taft's administration has raised its menacing head again.

Measure Defeated Tuesday Given New Lease of Life.

The day of self-sustaining supplies of lumber has passed in the United States, the committee was told by Secretary Wallace.

Fire protection and reduced taxes to stimulate forestry development were the principal measures proposed by the secretary and Mr. Baker.

Secretary Wallace said it was unconstitutional to attempt government control of private timber cuttings, but that this should be done by the states to give a reasonable form of public control.

SECOND SLASH EFFECTIVE ON APRIL FIRST

DISCOUNT PERIOD EXTENDED IN NEW SCHEDULE.

For the second time within the last year, gas rates were ordered reduced by the city council at its meeting last evening. The change will go into effect with the beginning of the new fiscal year next month.

The rates now in force charge $1.80 gross or 1.70 net for the 4,500 feet above the first 400, and then drop to the $1.50 rate.

In addition, the discount period will be extended from ten to fifteen days after mailing of the bills, in order to satisfy complaints that, under the 60-day billing, the bills come in on the wrong date with relation to industrial pay-days to permit advantage to be taken of the discount.

Service to users of gas will be better than ever, Manager Harris declared. The free "trouble man" appointed this year will be continued, and, through the use of a "booster," purchase of which was authorized last evening.

W. J. HODSON LOSES BATTLE FOR HIS LIFE

FORMER ESCANABAN DIES IN IRON MOUNTAIN.

Walter J. Hodson, former city engineer, died in Iron Mountain at 9:15 o'clock last night after a week's illness with pneumonia which originated in an attack of grippe.

Mr. Hodson was taken ill in Iron Mountain on Wednesday of last week. His condition since the latter part of the week had been critical, although there were occasional rallies which provided a basis for hope for his recovery.

Native of Escanaba, Walter J. Hodson was born in Escanaba 34 years ago. He was the son of Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Hodson of Chicago, formerly well known Escanaba residents.

He attended the local schools, was graduated from the Escanaba high school and after completing advanced work in civil engineering, was employed in the city engineer's office.

DEBATE CUNO SPEECH

Berlin, March 7.—(By the Associated Press)—The Reichstag today debated Chancellor Cuno's speech; the discussion revealed general unanimity in support of the government's attitude, while in the Reichstag corridors the talk chiefly concerned itself with the effect of the speech abroad.

In the course of the debate, Dr. Eduard David, for the Socialists, said the French ought to understand that an agreement was always possible, with France desiring only reparations and peace, but with France desiring to annex the Rhineland and the Ruhr, never.

Herr Herst, conservative, regretted that Chancellor Cuno had announced a rupture of diplomatic relations and a policy of reprisals.

The correspondent's informant stated that this movement would follow a plan drawn up by General Degoutte, commanding the Franco-Belgian forces in the Ruhr.

THE DIME NOVEL. A news item to the effect that two Baltimore boys, less than 17 years of age, departed from their homes with $32 between them, their destination the Canadian northwest, where they proposed to become mounted policemen, brings back to the middle aged and older men of the country the "dime novel" era of their own boyhood.

There are few men of fifty in the country today who did not fall at one time, in a large or small degree, under the spell of the "dime novel" which was so generously printed and circulated when he was in the romantic, formative age of his boyhood. These men will recall how they waited excitedly from week to week for the newest novel, and how they read it clandestinely, hidden away in the barn, the attic, or in their own sleeping room after "the folks" had retired, because few parents approved of the "dime novel."

In spite of this attitude on the part of the older people toward the dime novel they were not, after all, so injurious as many believed. As a rule they had no really bad effect upon their readers, and instances where boys turned to lives of crime because they read them were rare. Some of the most solid business men of today found their first thrill, their first sigh for adventure, in the dime novel.

It may be true that many of these boys dreamed of going out to the wild west for the purpose of fighting Indians. Perhaps some of them determined that as soon as they were old enough they would go to the great city and become detectives, running desperate criminals to their lair, and perhaps being so fortunate in the end as to wed the beautiful heroine of the piece. Few of them did as they planned.

Occasionally a boy would start out immediately and at a very tender age to "make his mark" in the ringing justice of bad men, but these instances were rare and generally the boy got no further than will the boys with the $32 who have started for the northwest.

As a matter of fact, the dime novel of 30 or 40 years ago was largely inspirational, and if the truth were known have been responsible for awakening in many young men the desire to leave the slow, plodding life of the country for the more active and broader one of the city. They did not become Old Cap Colliers, but they did become solid business men.

Whatever the faults of the dime novel may have been they never failed to teach a lesson. The hero, if he were a detective, was always a good man, with high ideals. He was honest, he fought crime, and wrong-doing in every form, and the criminal characters in the books were painted as such loathsome creatures that few boys would be tempted to follow in their footsteps. And if they should have been the fact they were always caught red-handed in their crimes, and finished their careers in prison acted as a deterrent.

The ever-successful detective, who risked his life a thousand times, but was always escaped unhurt, free to continue his fight on evil, was a high-minded gentleman, the soul of honor. He was always the respecter and protector of womanhood. Her honor was sacred to him and many of his most daring battles and narrow escapes were prompted by a determination to save her from the clutches of the villain.

The old-fashioned dime novel was not so bad as it was painted. And one thing may be said of it that cannot be said of the present-day cheap literature so greedily devoured by many young people. It never touched on those intimate details of life which are the base of many of the stories printed in cheap magazines that Robins are daily reported about Escanaba. Seems that the whole tribe of fool robins have lost all weather sense they ever possessed.

The fact that plumbers are co-operating with the city in framing a new sanitary ordinance, doesn't mean that plumbers will abandon the practice of walking back to the shop for their tools after reporting on the job.

Apparently those in charge of the Escanaba plan campaign in the state legislature are adhering to a carefully considered policy of watchful waiting.

"Chapters From a Woman's Life"

BY JANE PHELPS THE PORTRAIT IS STARTED. Chapter 83. Vashti Vernon's portrait had begun. She had the red velvet gown made by a famous modiste and Walter was delighted. She was to wear no jewelry, not even her pearls, although she had wanted to wear them. But Walter, as usual, had his way. Her heavy black hair was drawn softly back from her face and knotted low in her neck. When I dropped into the studio during a sitting, her loveliness made me gasp. In spite of myself I spoke enthusiastically about the effect, and Walter was as pleased as a child.

That question usually ended our talks on economy. It was his money. He worked hard to get it. But it worried me that we saved nothing. We paid our bills with promptness on the first of each month, but when that was done we never had but a few dollars left, perhaps not that.
