JULY 4th JULY 4th

When Patriots Wrote a Story All Peoples Have Learned

Back in 1776 a new history was begun—of Liberty and Right and Equality and Opportunity. One hundred and forty-eight years after—on this Fourth of July—we mark again a birthday anniversary of Our Country. From a peak among nations America now can see how widely the ideals of the Signers of the Declaration have spread. Worth celebrating, too, is the day when a man or woman signs a declaration to attain financial independence through a growing bank account.

Once a year the nation pauses to commemorate with impressive ceremonies and general jubilation, the date of its birth. A glorious custom—with a glorious background. But after all, isn't it the practical patriotism we express on July 5th—and every day in the year—that is most worth while? Isn't it our respect for the magnificent institutions of this great Republic, our observance of its laws, and our efforts to live FOR it as well as IN it, that is the real test of patriotism?

ESCANABA CONGRATULATED.

Escanaba is being heartily congratulated by the press of the upper peninsula upon the fact that the city and district is in the future to be served by one daily newspaper, through the purchase of the Escanaba Daily Mirror by the Press: The Ironwood Globe says:

"Announcement was made Sunday by the Escanaba Daily Press that it had purchased the Escanaba Mirror and that but one daily newspaper would henceforth be published for the people of Escanaba and vicinity.

"The transaction occasions no great surprise in newspaper circles of the Upper Peninsula.
Newspaper men realize that a city and community the size of Escanaba can support one good daily newspaper, but it cannot support two of them. The publishers of both newspapers are using excellent judgment. The readers, the merchants and the newspaper publishers, themselves, will benefit equally.

"Never in the history of journalism has it been so important to consolidate newspaper fields as today. Costs of publication have driven hundreds of publishers into consolidations. The day when a few thousand dollars will finance the establishment of a daily or even a weekly newspaper is past. Labor costs are the highest they have ever been.
Newsprint is constantly advancing. Machinery with which to print papers has advanced steadily in price. News services, such as The Associated Press, are expensive because of telegraph tolls.
In fact everything which enters into the making of a good, modern newspaper costs considerably more than ten or fifteen years ago. A small community which is maintaining two mediocre newspapers is losing many advantages which are found in communities served by one strong, outstanding publication.

"Escanaba can support one strong newspaper. The Escanaba Press has been a remarkably strong newspaper, editorially, but its support from the merchants has not been up to standard. Now that merchants can advertise in one newspaper instead of two, there is every reason to believe the Press will rapidly come into its own. The publishers plan to permit their readers and advertisers to decide whether an evening or morning paper will be adopted. At present the Press is a morning paper."

"The Iron Mountain News says:
'The purchase of the Escanaba Mirror by the publishers of the Escanaba Press marks the close of negotiations that have been conducted intermittently for two or three years past. The latter have been eager to buy, but the former not particularly eager to sell. Two or three times when it seemed as if the consolidation would be arranged, the deal, for one reason or another, fell through at the last moment.

"Escanaba is to be congratulated on the consolidation. It means that the Press, already a good paper, will be made a better one. The Press has the full Associated Press report, runs many interesting features and has a good staff of local writers and correspondents. It covers its field in an adequate manner. It has deserved all the support giving it the Delta county public can expect to see more evidence of progress in its pages.

"Escanaba was the last town of its size in the state to support two daily newspapers. A few years ago there were several that had two papers, but their number has been steadily decreasing. Increasing costs made it more difficult for the weaker paper to hang on and more imperative for the stronger paper to make some sort of a deal to clear up competition.

"In every instance where these consolidations have occurred they have worked out to the advantage of the public. The readers get larger and better papers, because it is possible to spend more money to make them attractive. The

Escanaba is being heartily congratulated by the press of the upper peninsula upon the fact that the city and district is in the future to be served by one daily newspaper, through the purchase of the Escanaba Daily Mirror by the Press: The Ironwood Globe says:

"Announcement was made Sunday by the Escanaba Daily Press that it had purchased the Escanaba Mirror and that but one daily newspaper would henceforth be published for the people of Escanaba and vicinity.

"The transaction occasions no great surprise in newspaper circles of the Upper Peninsula. Newspaper men realize that a city and community the size of Escanaba can support one good daily newspaper, but it cannot support two of them. The publishers of both newspapers are using excellent judgment. The readers, the merchants and the newspaper publishers, themselves, will benefit equally.

"Never in the history of journalism has it been so important to consolidate newspaper fields as today. Costs of publication have driven hundreds of publishers into consolidations. The day when a few thousand dollars will finance the establishment of a daily or even a weekly newspaper is past. Labor costs are the highest they have ever been. Newsprint is constantly advancing. Machinery with which to print papers has advanced steadily in price. News services, such as The Associated Press, are expensive because of telegraph tolls. In fact everything which enters into the making of a good, modern newspaper costs considerably more than ten or fifteen years ago. A small community which is maintaining two mediocre newspapers is losing many advantages which are found in communities served by one strong, outstanding publication.

"Escanaba can support one strong newspaper. The Escanaba Press has been a remarkably strong newspaper, editorially, but its support from the merchants has not been up to standard. Now that merchants can advertise in one newspaper instead of two, there is every reason to believe the Press will rapidly come into its own. The publishers plan to permit their readers and advertisers to decide whether an evening or morning paper will be adopted. At present the Press is a morning paper."

"The purchase of the Escanaba Mirror by the publishers of the Escanaba Press marks the close of negotiations that have been conducted intermittently for two or three years past. The latter have been eager to buy, but the former not particularly eager to sell. Two or three times when it seemed as if the consolidation would be arranged, the deal, for one reason or another, fell through at the last moment.

"Escanaba is to be congratulated on the consolidation. It means that the Press, already a good paper, will be made a better one. The Press has the full Associated Press report, runs many interesting features and has a good staff of local writers and correspondents. It covers its field in an adequate manner. It has deserved all the support given a daily newspaper in that field, and now that it is going to get it the Delta county public can expect to see more evidence of progress in its pages.

"Escanaba was the last town of its size in the state to support two daily newspapers. A few years ago there were several that had two papers, but their number has been steadily decreasing, increasing costs made it more difficult for the weaker paper to hang on and more imperative for the stronger paper to make some sort of a deal to clear up competition.

"In every instance where these consolidations have occurred they have worked out to the advantage of the public. The readers get larger and better papers, because it is possible to spend more money to make them attractive. The
