NO. 21.

NO BABY IN THE HOUSE.

No baby in the house, I know—
It's far too nice and clean;
No toys by careless fingers strewed,
Upon the floor are seen,
No finger-marks on the panes,
No scratches on the chairs,
No wooden men set up in rows,
Or marshall'd in files;
No little stockings to be darned,
All ragged at the toes;
No pile of mending to be done,
Made up of baby clothes;
No little laces to be washed,
No little laces to be washed,
No grumpy fingers to be washed,
No stories to be told;
No tender kisses to be given,
No tickles on the face,
No merry talks and "dolly" too—
No baby in the house.

BEING A SPANISH MOTHER.

Fred Harris had just finished his college studies, and was about to assume the responsibilities of life by getting married, and pursuing the calling of an M. D.

During the term of his educational process, Fred's unwelcome father, who had dabbled in business speculations, formed a second matrimonial union, leaving Fred to exist upon his own slender resources, namely a few thousand dollars, and the rental income derived from a small dwelling house bequeathed from his mother's side.

Upon reaching home, his native village, Fred and his fond hopes for the future were somewhat dashed, to the earth by the information that a Lady Mildred, a young lady who pursued him marriage, had gone off and wedded a gentleman, with a large fortune in silver and gold.

This turn of affairs was a reflection to render any man interested in practical speculation, to the price of gold, and Fred was one of those young fellows who possess the equilibrium of his nervous system, as every young man should.

Fred was warm at heart; so he fought and fought an angry man upon him, therefore, it will be perceived, in the part of the reader, that he is to become fascinated by one of the gentle sex.

But, too, Fred had other matters of first importance to attract his attention. He had no time for love now.

Upon looking a "look" of inquiry about the village, he discovered the important matter of an opinion and implicitly enough to sustain an apothecary's shop, together with a physician.

So accordingly he had the little dwelling house altered into a store, compelling his tenants, Mr. and Mrs. Toby Maple, to change their abode, to place to the third or upper floor, which he had just exclusively as private apartments neatly furnished.

About this time when Fred was nicely established, and his business fourishing, he received a letter from his father, John Morris, lamenting his late marriage and partnership, as the second Mrs. Morris was a perfect child, a tyrant, and impudent, for it was known that Mrs. Morris married John Morris under the impression that that gentleman was exceedingly wealthy, when in fact he possessed but about means for the support of the family, and having the precise opinion of the widow Grange concerning her reputed riches, as she had of him, she considered the lady not a bad bargain, could he but gain consent to an alliance, which he did eventually.

"Well," said Fred, as he finished his part of the letter, "father is desirous of finding a home with me, now that I am settled, and he desires a place for my stepmother as well. Let me see," said Fred reflected.

"Father says, 'he wouldn't shock her feelings for the world, and requests me to pay her all the respect due to her station.'" Well, that is rather cool of him, I must say, considering Mrs. Morris is a petty tyrant over him, but I'll rule the order of the house." And he did.

Job Morris was a weak minded sort of a creature, and was completely under the control of his wife, a fact which did not escape the notice of Fred, who, in a regular way, at times would reprove his father for tolerating the abuse he received from her powers of speech, rebuking him for his deception, and reflecting her to the station of a back on and kitchen.

Job was very patient under his reverse, remorse was gnawing in his heart.

But Mrs. Morris was louder in her complaint. When she was introduced for the first time into her new residence, her contentions expressions were difficult to withstand, until her continued reproaches passed the boundary of Fred's patience.

This came to a climax the morning after her arrival. Fred happened to be in the shop arranging some shelves, on which to place the few bottles and jars of drugs he had been enabled to buy, when his father, with a very downcast face, came to him.

Fred's affection for his father had never diminished one iota, and, therefore, to see him suffering, only added to the poignancy of his grief. He endeavored, in consequence, to cheer him up.

"I was just about calling for you, father," he said solemnly. "I want you to take a piano and a chisel, and put me set things straight; and, while you are at work, you must take the old son you used to sing when I was a child. The allusion seemed, for a moment, too much for the elder Morris.

"I shall never trill that again," was his reply, with a sullen shake of the head. "Never!"

"Now, look here," said Fred, taking him affectionately by the hand. "I've had my troubles as well as you, father, and though it was just touch you—go with me for a few hours after I've lost, I have put myself to gether again, and you must do ditto."

"But you haven't had such trouble," whispered Mr. Morris, "as that party upstairs."

"What has she been at you again, father?" inquired Fred, his brow clouded with a frown.

"A awful frighted Mr. Morris; awful!" "And what has Mrs. Morris been saying now?"

"I can't tell you," answered the poor old man; "but I can't stand it, and it makes me very ill."

The old gentleman's appearance was far from proving his words; he evidently had had little rest during the night.

"Stay down here," said Fred, his patience fully exhausted; "I'll speak to her on the matter."

"You won't hurt her feelings, Fred? entreated the weak but good natured old Job. "Remember, she's your father's wife."

"She shan't forget that my father is her husband, though," thought Fred, as he proceeded up stairs, and knocked at the door.

"You won't come in, whenever you are," cried his stepmother, from the interior. "My hair is in curl."

"Do not be ashamed of such a little domestic annoyance, in my presence," returned Fred, "if you don't mind, I'll return, Fred, after a ding her remarks." "You know, I'm a medical man."

"What business have you?" began Mrs. Morris, in her sharp manner, "my rooms?"

"I have no desire," replied Fred, very quietly and firmly, to affront you, but I will treat you tenderly and respectfully. If I do I'm sorry for it, but I will be your friend, not a foe."

"What does this creature mean?" murmured the lady, raising her voice as though she were addressing an imaginary audience.

"The meaning of the creature," solemnly returned Fred, "shall be made so to the reader, or the hearer, whichever, on please to read it of the creature—your as it is, it is his house, and he objects to his being made in happy to those who work to support it by one who lives idly on their labor."

"You know how I hate the very name of work, and you're always doing it in my teeth," declared the lady, with an aristocratic nod of the head.

"Not with the intention of paining you," reasoned the step on. "I would in the first place appear to your sympathy. Misses Jones, I've visited thick and thin on my poor father's head. You're a worthy. If it is not your part in the event, I shall not touch the single word in my pen, to mitigate his sorrows—to soothe his heart in his illness."

"Are you about to become a paragon of the doctor?" cried Mrs. Morris, "or do you mean to say that you're a professional at once?" naturally demanded the lady.

Fred passed by the intended expression without notice.

"You'll," he continued, referring to the previous words, "I conceive to be the only course pursued by a good father to his child whom he loves, or to his son whom he loves, or to his daughter whom he loves, or to his companion for this way of journey of life. You and I differ in opinion. You seem to think that a husband is to be more for a wife every possible occasion that he is to be continually re-proached for just events that he could not help, but that she should be told a life of worry and annoyance. However, as this happens to be my house, and you shall not exercise it here."

Mrs. Morris turned around, with the face of a fury.

"Brute!" she exclaimed.

"Go on, madame!" coolly remarked Fred. "You just now called me a creature, now it appears I am a brute; but brutes are obstinate, and in this matter, at least, I intend to have my way. Frankly, you are dependent upon my father, on my exertions. You shall either treat him with the most respectful affection, or you shall go to the— Can you guess? Well, then, to the almshouse."

The woman, shocked, screamed for help at the top of her voice. "Old Job was by her side in a moment."

"Oh, what have you done?" he demanded, of his son, "what have you done?"

"Job!" cried the over agitated lady; "you best believe, he's going to send us to the almshouse!"

"What, Fred!" ejaculated the old man; "would you?"

"Not," rapidly whispered Fred, aside to him, "if you had fifty wives, and each one of them was fifty times as bad as the one you now have."

"Yes, the almshouse!" repeated the lady. "Only to think of it!"

"Now, my lady," said Fred, "I can be very firm. I have made up my mind to a certain point, and I will not deviate from it in the least degree. You have injured and annoyed my father, and unless you apologize to him—"

"Apologize!" screamed the lady.

"Apologize!" quietly retorted her stepson, "or you must go to the almshouse."

Mrs. Morris sat down as rigidly as a statue, pursued down the corners of her mouth, and appeared like a wax model of pure obstinacy.

"Apologize! Never!"

"You're resolved on that?" asked Fred.

"Quite," responded Mrs. M.

"Then, I have nothing more to be said!"

"Nothing!" responded the lady.

Fred merely nodded his head, and the door closed, Mrs. Morris.

"I'm going," that in Mrs. Morris's voice was heard to reply from the upper regions. "What is the matter, Fred?"

"Mrs. Maple," seriously spoke Fred, "she has been accustomed to the service of a maid. Would you be good enough to assist her to dress up her things? She is about to leave here, I believe, for the almshouse."

Mrs. Maple looked around in astonishment. But she saw something in Fred's manner which convinced her that she was only called upon to pay a part of a favor.

"Certainly," said she; "I'll pack the lady's trunk with pleasure. Here, my lady!"

"As my love," replied Toby, above. "Come and pack some trunks."

Down Toby came, and busied himself in packing the trunks.

Mrs. Morris was beginning to be a little amused at the regular solemnity of the arrangement. Her valet had dismissed considerably, and what there was left of it would not take long to arrange. She began to talk.

"That sort of a pace is an almshouse!"

Toby, who had satisfied her curiously.

"Well, it isn't remarkable for any particular aristocratic elevation, but in this sort of a matter, it is to be sure."

"And she's a woman!" rejoined Mrs. M., "having most unfortunately at the in my way, when she has a house and her departure were possible."

"That is a house for—"

"Work!" struck in Toby. "That's it, you've got to work for a while as well as she."

"And people work there?" pursued the lady.

"Well," returned Toby, "they amuse themselves. Some of the ladies have good books, but they only lose patience, and—"

The prospect did not particularly brighten the imagination of Mrs. M. She began to tremble to the head, her penitent position, and to cry. Her first apology was not such an awful thing after all.

"Your things will be ready directly," remarked Mrs. M. to Mrs. Morris, "and relax."

"I would desire to speak with you now," she said to Fred.

Mrs. Maple winked at Toby, and Toby winked at Fred.

"Very much," asked the last named, when she was alone with his stepmother, "have you reached your determination?"

"It is a frightful thing," sighed the lady, "but I'm going to try to make an apology."

Fred was aside an affected reserve, which, when he spoke to her from his heart.

"Don't you believe it. When a man has done a wrong, it only deepens his fault to resist in it. To apologize is the only mode to wipe it away. Come, now. Fortune has smiled on my father, and you partook of his good fortune, now she frowns; cheer him in his disappointment. Why abuse him, when he will do this attempt?"

"Ah, Fred! you haven't enough elevation of soul to sympathize with me! The idea of his going to work!"

"Come," said Fred, "that point has been argued before. I know this well enough—he'd toil from morn till night to save you an ache in your little finger. Spare him by your forbearance, and then let me engage you that you will not on your own have an affectionate husband, but a stepson as well."

Mrs. M. was not entirely bad. She felt a little—but only just a little—touched by these words of Fred.

"I know," she said, "he treated me very well when he had it."

"Then," whispered Fred, giving her a shake of the hand of warm friendship, "treat him well, now that he has not it."

"I think," she replied—"I think I will apologize."

"No!" struck in Job, in a whisper to Fred. "Don't let her demean herself. I don't wish it. I don't intend it!"

"Nonsense," replied Fred. "You will spoil every thing, if you go on so."

"Job!" cried Mrs. Morris, with a despairing sigh.

"Must go to her!" muttered Job.

"Stay where you are," enjoined Fred, "or you are lost forever."

"Was Mr. Morris speaking?" asked the lady.

"He was saying," responded Fred, "interrupting his father's impulsive ejaculation, that he's quite weary out with your conduct."

"I didn't, Fred—I didn't," said Job, in a low tone, aside.

"That, indeed, he is so completely disgusted, he is resolved to beat it no moment longer."

"No, Fred," declared Job, "don't say it. It will break her heart—I am sure it will."

"Now," Fred proceeded, "your trunks are ready. I fancied you were about to apologize."

It was a bitter pill for the stepmother to swallow; but she made a face, and got it down.

"Give me your hand, Job," she whispered; "I am sure I regret it."

"Say no more, my dear wife," about Job; "you've made me so happy."

Fred turned to the Maples.

"Thank Mr. Maple," he said, "we may venture to attack the trunk; and perhaps Mrs. Maple will be kind enough to help my step mother to replace the contents in the drawers."

Although it could not be said that Mrs. Morris was entirely cured by the lesson she had received, still no doubt it proved of essential service toward the domestic happiness of the elder couple.

Whenever, in the future, the wife was more than usually annoying, the husband would summon sufficient courage to drop two words in a whisper, yet still loud enough for her to hear:

"Feel—almshouse."

Mrs. Morris then became quiet.

Mr. J. N. HULLER is receiving a new stock of Furniture.

About 250 tons of Real Estate changed hands during the week, having been purchased by the Jackson Purchase and transported by their scow to Big Bay. It seems there is no sand nearer coarse enough for furnace purposes. We have enough of the article "lying round loose" to supply several Blast Furnaces.

The Odd Fellows Celebration, consisting of Address, Supper and Dance, passed off admirably. The Address, as delivered by Dr. Bellows was an able exposition of the order, and it occurred to us that if Odd Fellowship was all it was claimed to be, it was odd that there were not more fellows belonging to the order. The Supper was gotten up and served in good style, at the Tilden House, and the Dance at the same place conducted by Conductor WEITMAN was a very pleasant affair.

The hearts of the fraternity were made glad by the presence of many brothers from Negaunee, Marquette, and Menominee. The latter party was accompanied by the Oconto Brass Band, which discoursed music sweet in large quantities.

Marshal WELLSBERG arrested two offenders during the week, who had violated the ordinance forbidding to close an acquaintanceship with Pike & Co. They were taken before Mr. Clark and fined $10.00 each and costs. Light is breaking, the spell is broken, arrests have been made for being drunk in the streets of Escanaba, and although it may not be the Millennium which approaches, we will not be surprised at anything hereafter.

Among the many buildings now being erected in our village we notice a large one on the corner of Ludington and Dousman streets, which is being built by T. KILLIAN for a store.

A Blast Furnace Company has been started at Appleton Wis., with $200,000 capital. They intend to have a 300 ton propeller, which will carry ore from here and return laden with Flour produce and manufactured articles.

No Steamboat at Marquette yet, although it is reported that a Tug aided by the wind and waves, and being remarkably expert in dodging icebergs did succeed in making her way to the dock. We are sorry for you, but there is the whistle of the Saginaw and we must go down and see if she has any strawberries aboard. Should we be successful in obtaining the berries we should like to trouble some of the Marquette printerhood, for some ice-cream.

According to the Chicago Tribune Fort Howard is to be the Eastern terminus of the Northern Pacific Railroad. As Midshipman Easy would say, "We'll argue that point."

The Menominee folks have not given up the idea of having a Blast Furnace yet.

In our note of the Odd-Fellows celebration we neglected to mention the dancing music, but we will defy the country to furnish better music for that purpose than is made by Messrs. KENT, SMITH and the CLEMENTS.

We enjoyed a sail the other evening in that snug little craft known as "Sandy's boat," and are not surprised that the owner thereof should be so enthusiastic in defence of her merits. SANDY makes regular and frequently daily trips from here to the Furnace and Sag Bay, and we would recommend all dyspeptics and consumptives as well as those having business to take a sail with him.

We have been doing some job work lately and would like to do some more, and although we do not pretend to beat Chicago very much either in execution or price, still we will say that we are doing the best work of the kind ever done in Escanaba. For further particulars enquire on the premises.

One evening during the week, as Mr. Wallace was about to close the store for the night, he was astonished by the appearance of a female, who, greatly agitated, sank into a chair and burst into tears. She was young, intelligent looking, and well dressed, yet there were unmistakable marks about her that showed her to be "one more unfortunate." She said that she had come up on the boat, and gone to different hotels, but was refused admittance, and she was walking quietly along the streets and was stopped by a party of ruffians, to escape whose files and insults she had rushed into the store. One of the listeners to her story was a sailor man, whose heart was touched, and he at once offered to get her lodgings in a quiet respectable place; but she told him that she feared to trust him, for aught she knew to the contrary, he might be one of the men who had abused her so on the street. He handed her a revolver and told her if he or any other man addressed a single disrespectful word to her to shoot them. He then accompanied her to a respectable private house, where she was taken in and taken care of for the night, leaving for Negaunee the next morning.

We had thought to publish the statement without comments; yet we cannot refrain from saying, if the brutes who abused this poor girl knew how much more detestable they were in the eyes of all respectable persons, than she whom they reviled, they might be benefited by the knowledge.

Capt. DENNIS of the Steamer City of Toledo, called on us last evening and says that he will start his boat immediately, and that she will run between Marquette and Houghton until July and perhaps the entire summer.

A. P. SWINEBORN, of the Marquette Journal, has been in town twice within the last week or two, but as his time has probably been so much occupied in writing "superbucal" communications for his own paper, and playing Billiards, he has been unable to call.

M. ROYER's Lumber scow arrived today, and is now at the dock.

Some of our people are engaged in gardening but others are wasting much time that might be pleasantly and profitably employed if they would but give up the idea we hear so often advanced that "there is no use in attempting to raise anything in this sand." We will admit that with the sand alone, the crops would probably be pretty slim but with the proper fertilizers the amount produced is astonishing. We have known raised on Lake Superior on a spot smaller than one of our village lots, 50 bushels of Strawberries in one year which at 25 cents per quart would give the snug little income of $160.00. We have also known 25 bushels of potatoes raised on a spot as many feet square, and flowers that could not be excelled either for beauty or fragrance. This sand that people are so much afraid of is one of the best foundations for a garden soil in the world. One way to make life happy is to beautify your homes.

CHURCH MEETINGS.—At the meeting called in our issue two weeks ago, for Thursday, 21st, there was great unanimity with regard to the importance of early action with regard to a suitable permanent location for site for a cemetery; and Messrs. Selden, Langley and H. B. Smith were appointed a committee to select desirable ground and report at an adjourned meeting; which was held on Saturday evening, and the committee reported in favour of a location North and West of that used last winter.

The report of the committee was accepted and adopted and the Committee continued, with instructions to secure if possible the site they recommend; comprising twenty acres. The meeting adjourned, subject to call through this office.

ORDINANCE NO. 29.—On motion the following ordinance was adopted: No person or persons shall be in open water, in any portion of Little Bay de Noc or Green Bay, within the limits of the corporation, without a full suit of bathing apparel, under a penalty of not less than one nor more than ten dollars for each offense.

It was ordered that a side-walk be constructed and maintained, on the north side of Ludington Street, from Tilden Avenue west to Campbell Street. Said walk to be made of two-inch plank laid crosswise, and spiked with 40d spikes to stringers not less than 2x8, 4x4 or, if round, 6 inches in diameter, and shall be not less than 6 feet wide between Tilden and Harrison Avenues and not less than 4 feet wide between Harrison Avenue and Campbell Street. The outside edge shall be 8 feet from line of lot. The Street Crossing shall be constructed as shall hereafter be provided.

N. B. My stock is entirely new, and made up in the LATEST STYLE, and will be sold at prices to defy competition. Call and examine for yourselves, whether you want to buy or not. Store in Clark's Block. SIMON GREENHOOT, Escanaba, Mich., April 30th, 1876.

SPECIAL NOTICES.

We understand that Mr. T. H. Kinsman has rented the building now occupied by Michael Ross, with the intention of establishing a Picture Gallery. This building is next door to the Post Office, and can be converted into very pleasant rooms.

Those who like to buy their Beef by the Quarter, will please call on me at the Marine and City Meat Market, and I will sell them of my own slaughtering, clean meat, from choice cattle, as reasonable as any you can choose to buy at. JACOB HETTMAN

Supervisors Notice. Notice is hereby given, that the Board of Supervisors of Delta County, will hold regular sessions on the second Tuesday of February, and first Tuesday of July. By order of the Board of Supervisors. E. P. LOTT, Clerk.

Not a Row.—The crowd seen around the Store of H. B. Smith, was not the result of a row, but of the realization that his store is the cheapest in town—especially for CASH buyers. Go there to buy at cost and have money left.

If you like good living, go to Hestiman's and buy some of that nice clean Lard of his own trying; also, some of those celebrated Pork Sausages.

We regret to learn that Mr. C. B. Strass has determined to sell out and leave town. He is an old resident, and has always kept a good assortment of goods in his line. He is making some new additions to his stock, for the purpose of closing out entirely, which will be done in defiance of competition.

$50.00 REWARD. The above reward will be paid by the County of Delta, to any one who will furnish sufficient evidence to convict any person of selling or giving, directly or indirectly, any spirituous or intoxicating liquors, or any mixed liquors, a part of which is spirituous or intoxicating, to any individual, within this County after this date. By order of the Board of Supervisors of Delta County. E. P. LOTT, Clerk. Escanaba, Mich., Nov. 2nd, 1869.

LATEST ARRIVAL.—Mrs. John Stouffer has just received a large assortment of the latest and most fashionable Hats and Bonnets. Ribbons, Velvets, Laces and a choice variety of French and American Flowers, which will be sold cheap.

If you can't find what you want at any of the other stores in town, go to HULLER'S and you will be sure to find what you want there. He has a good supply of Tea, Coffee, Sugar, Syrup, and all kinds of Dried and Canned Fruits, together with any amount of other Groceries which he will be pleased to sell you.

WANTED.—A partner with a small capital to engage in the manufacture of Brick or will rent yard, machine, &c., located a short distance above Escanaba. For terms address T. B. BANKS, Escanaba, Mich.

Notice.—All persons are hereby for hidden trespassing upon Macdonald, Donald & Co's land, under penalty of the law. H. B. SMITH.

PAY UP.—All accounts due me, and remaining unsettled by note or payment on the 15th of May next will be placed in the hands of the representative of the law for collection. H. B. SMITH.

AT WALLACE'S IS

THE PLACE TO BUY HARDWARE.

STOLEN.—Escanaba always had the name of being an honest town, but only a few nights since, a man did steal Doors, Sash, Paints, Nails, Glass & Iron enough to build a house, yet strange to say there is PLenty more left at Wallace's.

Young People go to the Corner Hardware Store and get your Hardware to go to housekeeping with.

Old people go there and replenish what you bought when you were young.

WHY they should call a man John Buffalo, who has been on Lake Superior 15 years, and never saw a Buffalo, except a Tin one, we can't tell

Babies go to the Hardware Store to buy your Rattles; Boys go there to buy Skates; Young Men go there to buy Guns, and Ammunition, Married Men go there to buy Household Goods and Building Materials; Old Men go there to see the "wonderful improvements that have been made since I was a boy," and everybody goes there to get anything they want in the line of Hardware.
