OLD TIMES.

There's a beautiful song on the lumbermen air
That we sing through the piney woods down here;
It comes from a singer where the waves were,
And a sweet heart and bright brown hair.
That paved in the morning beams.
Bells cry of suns and eyes of leaves,
A lone white bird is there;
A climbing vine, a clinging bough,
A thorn bed and a couch of down,
Lost loves and leaflets of prayer.
A breath of spring in the breezy woods,
Sweet from the quivery pine,
Bells cry of suns and eyes of leaves,
A bunch of brooklets, a bunch of buds,
Bird warblers and clambering vines.
A rose sprout and dimpled hand,
There's a ring of light in your hair;
There's a sprout of a woven band,
A tiny rock on the snow-white sand;
A tree and a vines bough.

There's a picture of grief in the beautiful song
That is on the lumbering air;
And loneliness sets in the festive throng,
That is on the lumbering air;
But you have distance the beautiful lay,
And its melody flows far away.
And we call it now Old Times.

Selected Story.

THE UNCONSCIOUS CONFESSION.
"Hurry up, gentlemen! the coach is waiting," cried the voice of the stage driver in front of the Metropolitan Hotel, at Long Branch.

My story goes back to the days when railroads to the Branch were as yet unknown, and when the transit to New York was achieved by coaches that ran toward Sandy Hook, where a steamer awaited the passengers.

A tall, handsome young man, at the summons, came down the stairs, two steps at a time, and almost ran over a matronly woman a few years his senior, who was crossing the hall.

"What! Going to leave us?" said the lady in some surprise, and with more meaning in her look than in her words even.

"Yes! It's no use," was the reply. "Thanks for your good wishes, which I can see in your looks, Mrs. Maxwell. But I'm tired of playing the fool."

"Pshaw!" said the lady, putting her arm familiarly about his, and leading him into the drawing room, which at that hour was deserted.

"Paint heart never won fair lady, Mr. Hastings. Listen to me. The coach will wait a moment."

"It's not a question of faint heart," answered the gentleman. "But Kate won't have me. See here, Mrs. Maxwell—it's hardly fair of you to corner me—but she refused me, point blank, last night."

"And what if she did? I refused Mr. Maxwell the first time myself. It's a way some of our sex have. Come, stay, and try again."

"I'm a proud man," was the reply, "and don't like being trifled with. But I'd stay, if I thought it would do any good. But it won't. She is not anywhere about, you see, though I told her I would go away to day. When I said it she actually laughed. And yet, confound her, I can't help loving her."

Mrs. Maxwell would like to have laughed also. But she knew better than to do so just yet.

"She was a little hysterical, or she wouldn't have laughed," she said. "The truth is, Herbert, you are a pair of fools. You are proud, as you say, and don't break her pretty face, both her hands and would run away, if Herbert had not been too quick for him.

"Darling," he whispered, clasping her in his arms, and drawing her to him. "God bless you for those words! I had come to try my fate once more. Say that dear coat again over again."

Kate was silent for a while. But his earnestness soon dried her tears, and made her forget her momentary shame.

By-and-by she looked up saucily, and answered:

"Well, listeners, and if I may such a flirt as Mrs. Maxwell tells me I am, you haven't much of a bargain. There, that will do!"

"Then you do love me?" insisted Herbert, eager to hear, in his own sweet accents, the acknowledgment.

Kate's eyes were now full of mischief.

"What is written on the sand, you know, is the simile for a woman's fickleness."

But even as she spoke, her eyes lost their saucy look, and gazed at him with such love that Herbert took her in his arms and kissed her repeatedly; and I am afraid if the truth must be told, Kate, after a while, will him return.

What a happy hour it was that followed. The lovers passed up and down the strand, past out of sight of any intruders, exchanging confessions as to when they first began to interest in each other.

Ah! that first hour of mutually acknowledged affection. Is there anything in life, ever after, half or quarter so blissful?

Mrs. Maxwell happened to be standing in the piazza of the hotel, as Hastings and Kate returned, toward dinner time arm-in-arm. She understood all at a glance, but could not forbear a little甘り.

"Ah! you're back again, Mr. Hastings," she said. "I thought you'd such a perturbative business in New York, that if you didn't get there to-day, the world would come to an end. And you, Kate, my dearest—said you had a dreadful headache. Walk walking in the sun cure it, child!—Bless me, how red your cheeks are! Really, you must use some glycerine. Do you know what glycerine is, Mr. Hastings? You really don't? Well, well," with an arch smile at Kate, "you'll find out now, once you've seen me, Mrs. Maxwell, seeing her face brighten, ventured a laugh.

It was a clear, musical laugh, and it cheered Herbert still more. He hesitated.

If another five minutes could have been granted to Mrs. Maxwell, she would have prevailed. But at that moment, a voice cried:

"Here he is. Hurry up, Hastings. We've been looking for you everywhere. The stage driver says he won't wait another moment. Ah! Mrs. Maxwell. Our holiday is over you see. Good-bye."

That interruption decided Herbert. He shook his head in reply to Mrs. Maxwell's imploring look, wrung her hand, and dashed out of the drawing room. The next minute the crowded coach was rattling heavily through the sand, with the surf thundering on its right.

It was six miles or so, to the steamboat landing. For the first two miles the passenger of all whom were gentlemen, chartered a pony; after that they gradually grew silent, and finally, driving in the shells in the sand acting as a kind of seashell. One or two, in fact, fell asleep. And now Herbert began half to repeat of what he had done. "Perhaps I have been too hasty," he said to himself. "What if Mrs. Maxwell is right?"

He mused thus for quite half a mile. "I've a great mind to go back, he thought. "Hold on driver," he cried. "I've changed my mind. Stop till I jump out. I'll walk back."

Before his sleepy companions could ask what he meant, he had left the coach, had lit a cigar, and was plodding through the heavily sanded on his return.

His mood soon changed again. "What a precious fool I am making of myself," he reflected, and he turned to hail the coach, but it was a quarter of a mile off.

He stopped still. "If that fish hawk dives before I count fifty," he said, "I'll go back to the Metropolitan Hotel; if not, I'll walk to the landing and take the afternoon boat."

The fish hawk dove almost immediately.

"He has dived for me," he said despondently. "Now let us see how wisely."

Meantime here was the offending Kate.

To her justice, however, she had not much she loved H. stills and oil she refused him. It was not altogether conquer that led her to say, "No." The answer had been given in the first surprise and embarrassment of the proposal. She was frightened to find, almost immediately, how much she misunderstood herself. She grew more and more embarrassed in consequence; and her manner afterward, at which Hastings took such offense, was as Mrs. Maxwell had suggested, really the result of nervousness. Ever before he left her she bitterly repented what had said. Had he persisted a little longer, she would have confessed the truth. She did not, however, think he would leave the Branch, even after he had said so. Hence, early in the morning, she had waited for a walk on the beach, hoping to meet him there, as usual; or hardly a day had passed without the last fortnight that these two had not met.

There was an old week, at that time about a mile or more, south of the Metropoli- tine, which had been a favorite haunt of theirs, and that they repaired. She tried to read till Herbert should appear, but her thoughts wandered from her book continually. Meantime the house was closed without her appearing. Her heart began to fail her, and she spent the time examining her rest feelings, and the more she scrutinized them, the more she felt her love had gone from her forever. By and by the hot tears began to come. She knew how grand Hastings was, and she said to herself that he would yet come back.

The sun shone heavily in; the fish-hawks sailed over, and the breeze fresh from the westward; the sun shone dazzlingly bright, it was getting toward noon. She gave up all hope at last, and rising, began to walk back toward the hotel. But after a while she sat down on aoulder, under shelter of the bank, for she had been all this time upon the beach below it. She would not yet abandon the chance of seeing him—Gradually she fell into a sort of reverie, and began, half unconsciously, to trace Herbert's name in the sand with the point of her parasol.

It was at this juncture that Herbert, walking along the top of the bank above, discovered her. He had already passed her, and would not have seen her at all but that his attention was suddenly directed to a fish-hawk, diving for a victim, had gone sailing off northward with its prey. His heart began to beat fast. Here was the chance he had wished, yet not dared to hope for; it surely was a favorable sign that she was still there. He stepped over the bank, and began hurriedly retracing his steps toward her.

He thought she would hear him as he approached; but she did not. She was evidently too absorbed; in what, however, he could not yet discover. He came nearer and nearer. What with the roar of the surf, and her own absorption, Kate still remained unconscious of his presence. He approached so close at last, that he could look over her shoulder. Blessed vision! Could he believe his eyes? She was writing with her parasol, in the sand, the word HERBERT.

Her first impulse was to snatch her to his arms. He was loved then! Mrs. Maxwell had been right.

But he restrained himself, waiting with bated breath, to see what she would do next.

She did nothing for a moment. Then she sighed, and went on writing slowly other words. They were HERBERT I LOVE YOU.

"Hastings could not himself longer. His cigar had long been out, though retained mechanically. He now flung it away, and, stooping over, caught Kate's face in his hands, and kissed her full on her ripe lips.

"She sprang up with a half scream, and turned to face him angrily, for she did not realize for a moment who it was. But when she recognized her lover, she blushed, throat, cheeks and brow even, she hid her pretty face, both her hands and would run away, if Herbert had not been too quick for him.

"Darling," he whispered, clasping her in his arms, and drawing her to him. "God bless you for those words! I had come to try my fate once more. Say that dear coat again over again."

THE EIGHT MARTYRED VIRGINS OF VERDUN.

Captivation of a French Town to the Prussians.—A Sad Episode.

Just 75 years ago—that is, on the 3d of September, 1792—the town of Verdun opened its gates to the Prussian army, which had been besieging it for three days under the command of the Duke of Brunswick.

It is a sad commentary on the instability of Royal greatness that Napoleon, in his captivity, is deserted by even the London Telegraph. A correspondent of that celebrated organ of the Imperial back-stairs sends from Paris the following remarks:

rills.

The Flat Rock saw-mill have shut down the most of their mill. They have sawed 4,718,000 feet of lumber and 1,100,000 feet. They propose to start for the woods about the 1st of the month.

The Republican Convention for the nomination of Representative in the Legislature from this district, met at Neogaunee

on Monday last, and adjourned until Tuesday, the 18th inst.

We visit the new building that has been erected by D. Langley Jr., near his residence, which is intended for a private school building. It is one of the neatest, coziest little school rooms it has ever been my privilege to enter, and the teacher comes highly recommended.

Do not forget that the County Board of Supervisors offers a reward of $50.00

to any one who will furnish sufficient evidence to convict a person of selling or giving whiskey to an Indian.

The Good Templars propose to hold another social soon and the members are

De Castro has been performing for the three first nights past, and has had crowded houses, and to-day no performance has been given. The village with which the citizens have been as universally well pleased as they have with this. We regret to say our up-keep readers to attend the last night, and each succeeding night, in this programme is changed each evening. The last evening there was given away a pig and $20 in greenbacks. The pig was drawn by Miss Anna Oliver, and the greenbacks by Mrs. Bushnell, a widow lady.

Wednesday last a train on the Peninsula Division, between Neogaunee and Ishpeming, ran afoul of a cow, which had the effect to throw a number of ore cars off the track, and stack them upside down, while the consorts so prominently scattered around that she could have been conveniently gathered up in a small hand-basket. The train was going backward at the time.

On motion, a tax of 1½ per cent, was levied upon the taxable property of county for county and state purposes.

On motion, the front rooms of Mr. Hiller's building was rented for county purposes from the 1st of December next at $100 per annum, he to store the county safe and records until that time free of charge.

On motion, board adjourned sine die.

SCHOOL REPORT.

Escanaba, Oct. 14, 1870.

MR. EDITOR: By means of your paper we hope, as below, to give a monthly report of some of the items of interest connected with the public schools. We hope that both in this way and by visiting from time to time at the school house, the parents will keep up such an interest in their scholars as to show them that they are really in earnest in wishing to secure to them an education whatever else they may leave.

The attendance is at rather a low per cent, for this month, some schools averaging as high as 95 and 98 per cent. This is partly on account of sickness of scholars and their friends, but in part, we cannot but think, on account of carelessness in seeing that scholars go to school, and go in time. Remember, friends, you cannot tell what important lesson is taught the very day your child stays away! At the same time we say this, we must also say that most of the parents of Escanaba seem to be interested in having their children learn. If any one is lax or negligent, just know that we would point that out, and we almost wish it were allowable to call his name in public. At any rate, we prophesy that your neglected children will reproach you through life for their want of education.

If any doubt the importance of timely and punctual attendance let me compare the attendance of those who are present two or three days in the week with those of him who is there every day and every hour. The following is the report of attendance for the month ending Oct. 7, 1870:

NUMBER ATTENDANT.

Romance About Eugenie.

Correspondence of the Lynchburg Republican. In 1861 the uncle of the writer resided as American Minister at Paris, with a large family around him. At this time a popular society there, Eugenie, a most charming, Countess of Monthy, a lovely person and an aristocratic name securing her brilliant ambitions in that society, and constituting her one of the most famous ladies in Paris. It was thought, and indeed freely remarked, that her mother was more ambitious than herself, that the former designed for her some great alliance, while Eugenie herself appeared a model of simple sincerity, a girl who would choose to consult her heart in any matrimonial affair. Her sister had just married the Duke of Alba and Berwick, a fine descendant of James II of England; and the worthy mother, Donna Maria, no doubt designed at least an equal matrimonial destiny for the more beautiful of her daughters. But the heart is not always to be controlled even in the most aristocratic life, or to yield to its exactions or conveniences. Eugenie lost hers in a fine-looking blonde Virginian, young William C. Rives, son of the American Minister. They were engaged to be married, but Aunt Maria's views, Virginia matron very decided and stern in her opinions, interfered and broke off the match; the Countess was too "fast" for the old Virginia views of social solidarity. The woman, for whom future had reserved so much escaped the comparatively humble match that her heart had decided upon—the destiny of a quiet Virginian housewife to ascend the throne of France. Alas, what other contrasts may yet remain for her! If an event had been ordered differently, if a prospective mother-in-law had proved complacent, the Empress, the woman who has adorned the throne of France and displayed to the world the charms of another Cleopatra, might at this moment be a quiet country matron living in a farm house near Cobham Depot, County of Albemarle, and State of Virginia!

"The Girl of the Period" in the Days of the Caesars.

So expensive were the girls of Rome that Julius Caesar was induced to offer premiums in encouragement of marriage. He allowed married women to dress more superbly than the unmarried, and to drive in costly carriages; and he relieved of various taxes the married man who was father of three children. The distinction of dress was gradually obliterated under the Emperors; but the privileges of the notitia clavis seem rather to have increased, since he had a right to the best seats at the public games, and was more readily admitted to official positions. Shall we come to this sort of thing in America?

The mania for an appearance of abundant hair, which has attacked the modern female world, seems not to have prevailed in Rome. In this city safe hair is rather the rule than the exception; it takes the form of chignons, braids, plait and what not. The female head, which is really a pretty thing when you can see its shape, is deformed by accretions and agglomerations. How long this absurdity of fashion will last we cannot guess; for fashion is strong, and does not require any effort, but indeed, the longer it lasts, the longer, by reason of being ugly and offensive. Fashion is the most irresistible of all forces; it is stronger than even religion. It is also the most unaccountable of all forces. You can seldom trace its origin, you can never calculate its duration. Inasmuch as fashion ought to be the application of art to social life, it would doubtless be an excellent thing in people of artistic capacity would condescend to "lead the fashion." This has been done by a man—Count D'Orsay. We do not think that any woman of the true type has attempted it. If only a lady, who united high birth and intellect, and a cultivated taste for the beautiful, would take this matter in hand, what a multitude of monstrosities we might spared.

Wise, in our belief, are those artists of dress who seek to imitate natural forms. Leaves and flowers, and even fruit, are delightful in the decorations of beauty. Even birds and butterflies have been appropriately pressed into the service. A bird of paradise or purple emperor adds to the fairy grace of a bonnet. Let the lady who is blue moon, Athens owl, and the gossip adorn herself with a magpie. Roman ladies were ahead of all American girls: "Gotham" calls Gloster, Gloucester, London, Westminster, Ypres, Gloucester, London, Westminster. Gloucester was around her neck a gold serpent; nor was she alone in this habit. Seneca, Lucian, Pliny, bear witness that the girls of Roma were living snakes around their necks, and cherished them in their bosoms. They seem to have found their pleasantly cool, William modern girl of the period set this fashion in midsummer? Pleasant for the eager lover to approach within escalating distance, and to find the glassy eyes of a snake fixed on him, its forked tongue quivering near him! This kind of partnership between Eva and her tempter is not altogether desirable.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

For restoring Gray Hair to its natural Vitality and Color.

A dressing which is at once agreeable, healthy, and effectual for preserving the hair. Faded or gray hair is soon restored to its original color, with the gloss and freshness of youth. Thin hair is thickened, falling hair checked, and baldness often, though not always, cured by its use. Nothing can restore the hair where the follicles are destroyed, or the glands atrophied and decayed. But such as remain can be saved for usefulness by this application. Instead of fouling the hair with a pasty rediment, it will keep it clean and vigorous. Its occasional use will prevent the hair from turning gray or falling off, and consequently prevent baldness. Free from those deleterious substances which make some preparations dangerous, and injurious to the hair, the Vigor can only benefit but not harm it. If wanted merely for a

HAIR DRESSING,

nothing else can be found so desirable. Containing neither oil nor dye, it does not soil white cambric, and yet lasts long on the hair, giving it a rich, glossy lustre and a grateful perfume.
