Dreams and Realities.

BY PHRASE CART.

One moment, thou fair and good,
And perfect flower of womanhood,
Then royal rose of June,
Why didst thou drop from thy time?
What didst thou do to thy sweet prime?
Why didst thou die so soon?

For looking backward through my tears
One moment, thou wast wasted years,
I cannot choose but say,
If then hadst lived to my guide,
Or thou hadst lived and I had died,
Were better far to day.

Of child of light, O golden head—
Eighty little hours of moment shed—
Upon life's lonely way—
Why didst thou vanish from our sight?
Could not my little light
From heaven's unclouded day?

O friend so true, O friend so good—
Then one dream of my maidenhood,
What didst thou do to thy heart,
What hast done, or what hast not done,
That through this knownes world till now
We walk with empty arms.

And still, had this poor soul been fed
With all it loved and coveted—
Had life been always fair—
What didst thou do to thy heart,
That with blue by innocent heart,
Forever tremble there?

They still kept their earthly place,
The friends I hold in my embrace,
And gave to death, also!
Could I have learned that clear, calm faith
That looks beyond the bounds of death,
And absent longs to pass?

Sometimes, I think, the things we see
Are not what they seem to be;
What that we plan to build;
That every hope that has been crossed,
And every dream we thought was lost,
In heaven shall be fulfilled.

That even the children of the brain
Have not been born and died in vain,
Though here and there a few have done;
But with a brighter, better shore
They live, embeded eternally,
And wait for us to come.

And when on that last day we rise,
Look up between the earth and skies,
Then shall we hear our Lord—
Say, Then shall our love and death;
Blessed be the soul that to the faith,
Shall be thy faith's reward.

HOW I LOST FIVE DOLLARS.

Fifteen years ago there were few inns throughout the whole geographical extent of Ohio wherein one might pass the night without an excusable doubt as to whether he would awake on the following morning both with unnooled carpet-bag and an unnooled testaceous.

I professed, however, that, when, on a certain evening in September, 1855, I reined up my horse in front of a very respectable looking building, which had been designated to me as "the biggest hotel in the village," the expectation which I had formed of finding very disagreeable quarters after my long, tedious ride across the country, was most pleasantly disappointed.

And, on entering the small, but neatly appointed dining room, I received a still more delightful shock; for there waited an elderly, red-faced individual, of genial appearance, who informed me that I could satisfy my hungry cravings with excellent supper, inside the short space of a quarter of an hour.

The supper proved, indeed, excellent, and just as I had finished satiating myself to the uttermost, the red faced individual re-entered the room, and desired that I would have the goodness to follow him, provided I waited a good smoke.

"There happens to be quite a little crowd in the barroom to-night," said this gentleman, who was evidently the "mine host" of the establishment.

"But you'll find 'em all pretty decent," I reckoned. "I've done my best, sir, to have the company that certifies here nothing as first-class as possible."

"I don't think that you will do so," was the rather haughty reply. Then the door of the ante room was closed, and a few seconds later, we heard the sound of a key being turned on the other side of it.

Utter silence reigned for several moments. The man who had made so strange an offer to reveal the super natural stood, gazing at the recently closed door with an expression of solid earnestness on his countenance.

Presently there came a low, rapid cry from behind that same closed door. Every eye was turned toward it, and after finishing his own meal at the jail he eats all the other prisoners leave, even to the last crumb. The case is one well worthy the attention of the medical profession. The boy was placed in jail on a charge of stealing, but really to get him out of Gavitt's hands. He ought to be sent to the house of correction or the reform school, where he can receive good medical treatment, as there can be no doubt that this terrible appetite is a disease. He was asked if he could eat a baby, and he replied that he could if he should try, and that he came very near it once. It is said that he attacked a boy on one occasion telling him he must kill him to get his blood, for he must have blood. Every feature of the lad bespeaks harsh treatment, and it has not been the recipient of it, is it indeed hard to account for his appearance and habit. His hair is very white, his eyes blue, his lower jaw square and strong, nose flat with a sinister expression to his countenance, but over all is the terrible hungry look which strikes one with pity. He certainly ought not to be permitted to eat raw meat or indulge his depraved appetite, since if he be the subject of disease, a remedy would be more difficult to apply. We hope our officers will no longer indulge a morbid curiosity by allowing such青年 to spoken:

"For heaven's sake, Andrew Robinson, can it be true that you are standing here beside me! I see you as plainly as I ever saw you in life. You must come from another world, and yet—oh, mercy! he comes toward me—his eyes—oh, help! I am fainting—I—I—I."

They all seemed, with a single exception, men of a rugged, hard working sort, who had assembled together purely for purposes of harmless conviviality and good fellowship. The single exception was a person of perhaps thirty years old, dressed with sober neatness, and having an appearance, at the same time, gentlemanly and modest.

But I remarked, with pleasure, while seating myself before a certain fragrant hot beverage, and lighting my companionable briar-wood pipe, that there was not a single man in the apartment who wore the least approach to what might be termed a "desperate" demeanor.

J. C. DOUGHERTY, Director.

In the course of a sermon preached in Grace Church, Chicago, on the 20th instant, the Rev. Clinton Locke said:

"Look at one thing: the charities of railways. I mention them in this connection because they are nothing we connect with religion, and their having "no souls" is a stock newspaper phrase.

"Why should railways give half-fare to ministers any more than a bakers' association should do their baking for half price, or a company of grocers sell their goods at a great discount? Yet all these railways gracefully do it—a magnificent charity—amounting in this city alone to thousands of dollars enabling Christian ministers to do a vast deal of good and enjoy a great deal of pleasure. And more than this: no one outside of their own offices dreams of the immense charities they do the sick and poor, transporting them everywhere free of charge, bringing them, and, with the express offices, untold quantities of wood, and coal, and food to charitable institutions. You go to any railway office with a well-deserving case of charity and you will be heard courteously, and never refused. They need not do one thing of this. It is not in their bond. But that blessed charity which daily preaches wider through the world prompts them to it. They do not boast of it; but it gives me great pleasure to speak of it, for I owe them a heavy debt of gratitude."

On motion of Dr Smith, the Report as read by the Director was accepted and approved.

The Director presented an estimate of the expenses for the coming school year, as estimated at the last meeting of the District Board, which was as follows:

POTATO BUGS

Mr. EDITOR.—My communication comes late in the season, but knowing that the people in general, have been much interested in finding a specific remedy for the potato bugs, I will give what information for the future.

I have seen many instances of potato bugs in potato bushes. That being the case, why will not any other liquid extract of tobacco, be as effective. It is at least worthy of a trial, and would be inexpensive compared with Paris Green, which has been extensively used for the same purpose, but with little, and in many cases no effect.

To prepare the juice, take a pound of cheap tobacco, and boil it in water until its strength is all out, and strain it through any coarse cloth. It can be applied with a common sprinkling pot, having a fine strainer. The necessary strength of the liquid could be easily determined by experiment. W.

The School Report takes up considerable space this week, but as it is a matter of interest to every tax-payer, know when, and how their money is expended, it could not be better used.

We notice that Dr. Brewster recently of Janesville, Wis., has recently joined us, and proposes to stop with the good people of Escanaba for some time. The Dr. comes highly recommended, and we wish him all success.

IMPROVEMENTS have been made by several of our business men in the way of new signs. People can now go along streets and find good reading matter the whole length of them. Among those we notice those of Greenhout, George, and C. C. Royce.

Mr. A. C. Darling surprised us every day with the sight of a couple of large cabbage and cauliflower heads we have ever seen grown in any country. Another evidence of the practicability of raising vegetables in this climate.

PERSONAL.—A. B. TURNER of the Escanaba and Frank Gardner of the Democratic both papers published at Grand Rapids, have been in town the past week, taking the benefit of the pure air for which this locality is so justly famous.

The good natured countenance belonging to A. Hull, Esq., long and familiarly known as Civil Engineer on the Peninsula Division, looked in upon us a few minutes the other day. We understand his stay is to be short, a much regretted by his friends.

Why is it that some persons claiming to possess common honesty, will hear a thing told, and turn right around and tell it to another in an entirely different way and with the grossest exaggerations.

We are indebted to Sergeant Martin for the following summary of his Meteorological observations for the past week: Average temperature, 62 deg.; Mean barometer, 30.01; total velocity, 1500 miles; average daily velocity 227 miles; average hourly velocity 9 miles. Total rain fall 0.46 inches.

Get your bill heads, letter heads, cards, posters and pamphlets printed at the Tribune Office. We can do just as good work, and at as low rates, as any printing house in this part of the State.

W. J. Wallace our enterprising Hardware Merchant, is to put in one of his patent Heating Furnaces in the Public School Building, now nearly completed. Mr. W. is very Sanguine of its success, and from what we saw of it last winter we should judge has good ground on which to base his hopes.

Among the arrivals at the Tilden House, we notice those of Mr. Louis and Miss FANNY RADDE of New York, who spent the summer season here last year. It is a notable fact that when people have once had a taste of the pure and healthy air of this region, they never go elsewhere to pass the summer months.

A surveying party under the superintendence of G. A. Randall, who have been engaged on a preliminary survey of the C. & N. W. R. extension from Menominee to this place, arrived here Thursday evening. They express themselves as highly pleased with the route traveled over as furnishing a good line. They returned to Menominee Friday morning, when they will start on another survey from Menominee to Negauke.

The following are among the late arrivals at the Tilden House:

H. B. Hinsdale, Kenosha, Wis., John Carpenter, Esq., and family, J. Gunther Coker, and son, Hon. Blond Ballard and son, Hon. J. K. Goodloe, Louisville, Ky., Wm. Cox and family, Hon. John B. Rice, P. A. Hall, Esq., Chicago, A. B. Turner, Esq., Frank Godfrey, Grand Rapids, John G. Brainerd, H. H. Brown, Cleveland, G. R. Randt and Corps of engineers.

Smith was married to Mr. Jones recently, while she held the office of Postmistress. The question is: Who held the office after the ceremony was performed? Certainly not Miss Smith, there was no longer a Miss Smith.

And certainly not Mrs. Jones, for no such Postmaster was known to the department. We give it up. The fact is, the institution of matrimony is becoming quite inconvenient in this days of women's rights."

RATHER FACETIOUS.—The Hartford Post perpetrated a practical joke of the first magnitude a few days ago, with a design evidently forcing the season, the heat being on that day exceeding, it published half a column of paragraphs, of which the following are samples: "If your feet or ears get frost-bitten the thing to do is to put them at once into cold water and restore the circulation." "Notwithstanding its comfort, a hot fire in one's sleeping room is unhealthful." "It is said that fur mufflers worn about the throat are unhealthy. They should be guarded against in this weather." "Coke makes a warm fire, as well as a pleasant one. It can be had at the gas-works." "How comfortable it is to sit down before one of those old-fashioned roaring fires in an old-fashioned wide mouth fireplace. There were other paragraphs about the pleasures of sleigh-riding, the delights of skating, and similar aggravating topics.

A Woman's Execution, Paris, May, '71.

By George Kroe.
Sweet-bred and young—
The people were mourning—
No more tears—
Going to slaughter!

Good morning, friends!
You'll love us better—
Make us amends:
We've burst your fetter!

"How the sun gleams!
(Women are smiling);
Give me your beams,
Liberty's darling!

Marie's my name—
Christ's mother bore it;
The world? No mention;
Glad I was it!

Clear to her waist;
Till she is dead;
Boots are dispensed;
"Sister! please screen us!"

"He at the front?
That is my love;
Blood all the brunt;
Now the fight's over!

"Powder and bread
Gave out together;
Dread to be left;
In the bright weather!"

"I am, boy! we might
Die in the bright weather!
This the wall? Right!
Fire to Commerce!"

The St. John Regatta.

Graphic Description of the Race and its Tragical Result.

The particulars of the International Boat Race, which we are able to place before our readers, appear to possess considerable interest to the rowing fraternity.

The magnitude of the stake, and the interests involved, naturally took to the peaceful shores of the Kennebecasis and St. John Rivers, a crowd greater than any which has visited the quiet city of St. John since it deserved that name. Thousands of visitors from the States and the Dominion flocked to St. John, and fortunate indeed were they who could secure accommodation in the hotels and private houses. The race had been fixed at an unusually early hour, for the purpose of securing clear, calm weather, a stiff land breeze generally stirring the broad waters of the Kennebecasis after 10 or 11 o'clock. The course chosen was on the river named, at a point near its confluence with the St. John River, where it spreads into a broad, placid, shallow lake, about seven miles in length, and two in width.

The scene around it is especially lovely at this season of the year, the bold fruইing banks being clothed with foliage, and dotted all over with white farm houses. Looking upon the lake, is a lofty headland, rising almost sheer from the water to the height of about 400 feet, to which strangers flock to see the sun set—a sight not easily forgotten. This headland, near Holt's farm—Holt is a character in St. John—the proprietor of Mosquito Cave, and the owner of a large lumber yard in the vicinity of the peak—commands a view of the entire course, and was thronged with spectators at an early hour of the day.

Along the banks, too, were thousands of people, strong in their faith, and certain that the pink colors of St. John would belong to the winning crew. The air was chilly at 7 o'clock, as it always is in New Brunswick, along the Bay of Fundy. The regular sea-fog had not yet put in an appearance. The sky was cloudless, but the air was chilly. The crowd, numbering about 15,000 persons, shivering for nearly an hour before the race was called. The ladies were out in thousands, wearing in every possible place the colors of the St. John crew, and was thronged with spectators at an early hour of the day.

The scene around it is especially lovely at this season of the year, the bold fruইing banks being clothed with foliage, and dotted all over with white farm houses. Looking upon the lake, is a lofty headland, rising almost sheer from the water to the height of about 400 feet, to which strangers flock to see the sun set—a sight not easily forgotten. This headland, near Holt's farm—Holt is a character in St. John—the proprietor of Mosquito Cave, and the owner of a large lumber yard in the vicinity of the peak—commands a view of the entire course, and was thronged with spectators at an early hour of the day.

At 6 o'clock the Tyne men rose, and being too much excited to eat, amused themselves by chopping wood to raise an appetite. Renforth was in excellent spirits, chatting jovially and chaffing the St. John men about the race. Chambers, too, looked hearty and full of life, and enjoyed the morning walk, but Kelly and Percy looked over-trained. The members of the St. John crew, however, looked in first-rate condition—perfect marvels of muscular Christianity. At 6:30 o'clock the latter made their appearance and went on board their tug, which conveyed them to the Judges' boat, where they waited until the Tyne men should appear. A few minutes after 7 o'clock they went aboard their boat, and were followed in a few moments by the Tyne crew.

The home crew won the toss, and chose the outside position, and were hailed with cheers as they took up their position, and the plaudits were renewed as their opponents followed. The two crews sat upright in their boats, eager yet silent, their oars just poised above the water, waiting for the word. An intense silence pervaded the spectators. Mr. T. R. Jones, the referee, said "Are you ready?" The two stroke oars nodded in the affirmative. Twenty seconds elapsed, and the referee said, "Then go!" and away they flew. The Tyne men caught the water first, and gained a few feet, settling down to 39 strokes, but in less than half a minute the St. John men, rowing 42, caught them. Renforth found them going away and quickened, the spectators yelling with excitement. He increased the speed to 43 strokes, and for two minutes the boats were level—Then the New Brunswickers drew ahead, foot by foot, till they had half a length. Then again Renforth spurred, and caught them, but again the St. John men drew away foot by foot. Renforth had frequently stated it as his belief that the race would be determined in the first mile, and now he labored with fearful energy. But to no purpose—the gap increased, and the first mile was won by the St. John men by three lengths. Then occurred of which the New York Tribune gives the following graphic account:

When the boat got opposite to Apelby's Wharf, in a line from the starting buoys, Fulton's crew being a full length ahead, to the great astonishment of everybody the Tyne men ceased rowing, and but three of them could be seen from the shore in their boat. The two in the boat rowed slowly, to the shore, and, as the boat neared the land, Renforth was seen lying back in the arms of Kelly, who sat next in front of him, apparently insensible. The crowd, which had been yelling at the top of their voices, became dumb with surprise on seeing the Tyne boat stop, and a rush was made towards the spot where the three Tyne men lapsed their fallen comrade ashore.

The belief was general at first that Renforth was playing a trick, and had pretended to faint because he saw the race was lost. There were cries of "Fraud!" "Shame!" "It's a sell!" "He knew he was beaten!" "It's a shabby trick!" and a thousand other similar exclamations, mingled with cheers, shouts, and the screaming of the whistles of the steamers and tug boats in the stream.

But it was no trick that poor Renforth was playing. Death had played a "shabby trick" with him, and had snatched the car from his hands in the midst of the race in which he had hoped to win the brightest laurels of his career. The poor champion had pulled his last stroke. He was taken up the bank, put in a carriage, and driven to the little tavern near the cove where he had spent the three weeks of his training. He never spoke again, and died about nine o'clock. The physicians pronounced the cause of his death to be pulmonary apoplexy, brought on by excitement and over-exertion.

Meanwhile the St. John men pulled on, without slackening their pace, and pulled over the course in thirty-nine minutes and twenty and three-fifths seconds. They came in unconscious of the appalling event which had given them the race so easily, and were welcomed with applause. Their friends were also of the opinion that it was a "well-timed job."

Two of the victors then took up a collection for their vanquished opponents, and got a large sum of money. When the news of Renforth's death was spread, the greatest consternation was exhibited. All the flags in the city were lowered to half-mast, and great dejection was observable throughout the town.

The lamentable finale of the race appears to have created an immense depression in rowing circles in Halifax, and the programme has been completely disarranged. The death of Renforth was attributed, for some reason, to poison, but this absurd charge has not yet been authenticated, nor is it likely it will be. The Tyne crew have objected to a post mortem examination by any but an English surgeon, and the task has been undertaken by Dr. William Wade, of the Seventy-eighth Highlanders. The result is not yet known.

JAMES RENFORTH was born on Rapids Banks, Gateshead, and was the greatest single sculler England ever produced. He was 28 years old, 5 feet 7 inches high, and weighed 157 pounds. When very young he enlisted in an East India regiment, and was in the Madras Fusiliers until after the transfer of the company's forces to the Crown, when he was discharged and returned home. He won considerable reputation as a swimmer previous to becoming a rower.

He made his début as a sculler in 1863, and won his first races for 250 successively against Robert and James Boyd. In November, 1868, he defeated Kelly, the champion sculler of England, over the Thames course from Putney to Mortlake. He rowed stroke in the race at Lachine, when he became known to rowing men in both worlds. His brother, Stephen, formerly a trainee, was subject to fits, and it is probable that James had the same tendency.

What One Man Has Done for Wisconsin.—Of a small man—physically, a man with a firm mouth, a clear, active, and a step as elastic as a boy's, a mind fearless in its investigations, a spirit of wonderful patience and endurance, and an ambition to learn that is once restless and tireless—the Chicago Post thus speaks: "Such a man is Lyman C. Draper, the father of the Wisconsin Historical Library, the largest collection of books west of New York, and the third in importance in the country. No man—not even excepting the public spirited Ex Governor Farwell—has done so much for Wisconsin as has Mr. Draper. He has created an epoch in the history of that state, before there was ignorance, and a sort of centre for the literary culture of the West in a state where before there was nothing to attract the student of letters. Twenty years ago he went to Madison and was made Secretary of the Historical Society. He devoted himself to his work with a genuine passion, and so inculcated others with his ardor that he made the little nucleus of a trunkful of books produce the past five years were $11,691.914, a decrease on the previous year of $140,512. The principal changes in the officers are the retirement of the General Manager, Geo. Durfey, and the election of James H. Howe, as his successor, and the appointment of B. C. Cook as attorney in place of M. H. Howe. The company has sold 1,000,000 volumes, and has sold through the Brooks Valley, to La Crosse, to connect with the La Crosse, Trempealeau, and Prescott road, to give them a direct line to St. Paul, and have sold $2,400,000 "Memoranda Extraordines Gold Bonds," to complete the gap between Fort Howard and Escanaba, so as to connect with its line. The Spanish-American war has been filled or seriously injured on any of its lines during the year.

AMONG THE STARS.—There have been some changes in the atrial world here. Col. Wool has taken possession of the Museum, refitted, cleaned and painted it, and introduced many new attractions—among others a fine male, sixteen feet in circumference—and has a very creditable collection under the management of Mr. Langford.

Alas goes to Hooey's Opera House. McVicker's has been rebuilt, and will open with a new company the first of next week. The Minstrels have returned to the Dearborn. The Globe is looking for a customer.

CHICAGO CORRESPONDENCE.

The Growth—The Grain Crop—Price-House—Business—Webster-Broad-African Methodist Conference—Chicago and Northwestern Railway—Amusement.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26, 1871.—The long season of dry weather was relieved by a copious shower early this morning, which lasted several hours and did an immense amount of good in the northern, which in the extreme western part of the city there was but little rain. The northern portion of the state has suffered severely from drought for some weeks, though there have been occasional showers in some localities. Still the throughout this state and the Northwest will be very large, as the acreage exceeds that of last year, and the yield in many places surpasses expectations. The of wheat, No. 2, ranged from $1.17 to $1.20, and the price of tobacco. If there should be a large European demand this season, so as to ensure a fair price for the grain crop, there will be good times for farmers, this fall.

GRAIN CROP

MONEY

has been abundant at the banks, and little call for it. But it is beginning to go into the country, and it is expected that there will soon be a large demand for it to move the grain crop.

BUSINESS

has been unusually quiet, but begins to be more active. The small merchants have been making large preparations for the fall trade, especially in dry goods, hardware, boots and shoes, clothing and millinery.

Among the large dealers in Millinery Goods, who have made Chicago the favorite resort for the millions of the Northwest, is the old, well-known firm of which, in sixteen years' business here, has earned a reputation for keeping the best class of Millinery Goods in this market. Their large store of six stories, 81 Wabash Avenue, is filled with the ample stock of the latest styles, ribbons, flowers, hats, gloves and fancy goods for the trade, and the latest styles. They make a speciality of Kid Gloves and Fine Linen, and manufacture their own straw goods from the freshest designs. Their supply for the fall trade is unusually large and attractive. Their Retail Department is stocked with the choicest and most fashionable goods, and is well worth visiting.
