and being unable to replace them at a time
when they are so badly needed.

The Chair by the Sea Shore.

An old man sat in a worn arm-chair,
Watch as now is his thin soft hair;
Turned his cheek by time and care;
And back and forth he sways;
There's a far-way look in his dim eye,
For his sate eyes more 'neath a cloudless sky.
And in childhood merrily plays.

He rests his cheek on the head of his cane,
And he looks once into his bright, bright face;

Down the stony eys he can trace
A love remembered and dear.

Then he wakes and sighs: 'Tis seem but a dream,

That comes to me now like a golden gleam,

Or the shimmering glow of the sun's last beam.

But 'tis pleasant to think it o'er;

That youth was so sweet, but now is past;

Those days of love were too precious to last,

But over yonder their pleasures are cast.

And I am leaving the shore.

He is gazing on his little boat;

Over the calm still water they peacefully float;

But often old joys bring a well-known note

From the land he left behind.

But this will rock for him no more,

And he goes away to other shore,

And know, when the voyage of life shall be over.

Then his dream beyond will find.

The seeds of youth which we sow,

Adown through the idea of the future will grow,

And when on bough a beautiful glow.

As they come in memory's gleam,

Loved ones will come to dimming dreams;

Sweet words will echo in dreams bright,

And circle old age with their halo of light.

As they mingle in dreamful scenes.

FARM AND HOUSEHOLD.

Horses in Stables.

A correspondent of the Indiana Farmer writes: "I have tried a variety of means to prevent horses pawing in the stable, among others, the strap and chain, but all failed. Recently I devised a plan which has succeeded to my entire satisfaction. I made a frame four feet long, and of sufficient width to reach nearly to the top of the manger, from which I suspended it, allowing it to reach to within about ten inches of the door. I boarded up the rear or frame, in order, that the horse could not get his head over the lower bar which was a hindrance to the two hind legs. The act of pawing now sets the swing in motion, causing it to strike against the shins, which so disgusted my animal that he very soon gave it up entirely."

Carey Parades.

A correspondent of the London Farmers' Gazette writes that "a drop of linseed oil put on the ends of perchers in the cages of canaries, where the red meter sometimes breed by thousands, will instantly kill them, and if applied occasionally will keep others away. They can be easily kept out of the nests by drenching the box or basket with quicklime inside, and then making a nice nest with clean moss." Another correspondent, "Fringilla," writing upon the same subject, says: "I paint my cages with carbolic acid, para or meta, or water; to dip the edges in solution is simpler. Don't let the birds enter till they are dry. Six months have elapsed since I daubed my cage, and I have not seen a mate since. M-birds are allowed to bathe frequently."

The Vastness of Our Deserts.

We get some idea of the vastness of our country from the statistics furnished by Mr. Dodge, of the Department of Agriculture. Less than one-fifth of the entire area of the United States is mapped into farms, and only one-fourth of this farmland is tilled or sown. Heavy as one crop is, it occupies at most less than six-tenths of one per cent of the surface of the country. One nation crop, maize, covers a territory not larger than Yucatan and the potato crop could grow in less than the area of Delaware. The country is capable of producing food for the support of a population almost without number. There is no danger of our being overcrowded for centuries. Let us remember this fact when the thought is suggested to us that it is time to discourage immigration.

Dark Stables.

There can be no doubt that light is as important to the health of animals as to man. We all know the exhilarating effect of sun light upon ourselves. We know that plants cannot live in a healthy way without light, and that in a cellar where a ray of light comes through a crevice, plants will stretch toward this light. We should endeavor to render stables pleasant for our animals, not only out of motives of kindness but from motives of interest. An animal will thrive better on the same food in a light cheerful stable than in a dark one. In building new barns, care should be taken to arrange the stables on the south or east side, so that direct sunlight may be admitted. A stable should be made as light as the "living room of a house"; thus to do one could not be an advantage. Light is the best friend to the animal.

Hoist SIRLOIN OF BEEF.—The name has remained long after the thing has passed. We speak of a roast sirloin of beef, but roasting jack and turnip have died away before the presence of cooking stove and range. Now our Christmas dinner is a roast, a joint weighing from fourteen to sixteen pounds from a young fat beef. Having laid it in the dripping pan, templeton downward, with the long thin end curved under such a way that the top of the beef will present a nearly flat surface, dredge it slightly with flour, and put about three tablespoonsfuls of boiling water in the bottom of the pan, setting it in a very hot, but not burning oven. As soon as the surface of the beef is browned that the juice will not readily escape, allow the oven to cool to a moderate degree of heat. Baste the beef frequently with its own dripping. From four to four-and-a-half hours, in a first quiet oven, the meat will be done, while the yeoman jailer, in his middle age, is informing a victim that the church is open to all corners at 11 and 3 on Sundays, Mr. Hepworth Dix, the Yeoman jailer, up the narrow staircase and into the little rooms of this house, the curious crowd, poured on Saturday and heard with astonishment the story of the chivalric Earl of Essex, whom some ever set his thirst in the foy. To the gods add the sugar, stirring it in well, then put in the flour (but stir it lightly). Add lemon, and bake at once.

BUTTERFLY PANKAGE.—One tea-spoonful soda, two-teaspoons sweet skimmed milk, two-tablespoonfuls cream; thicken with flour to a stiff paste; and let it get light; then steam over water, and if good, add a stiff bread is made, a good pudding will be the result (eaten with sugar) with very little trouble, but it must be steamed done, and raised light.

WHITE SPONGE CAKE.—One and half-tumblerful of white sugar; one tumblerful of sifted flour; whites of 10 eggs; 1 teaspooonful of cream tartar; extract of lemon. Beat the whites of the eggs in a stiff froth. Add the extract in the foy. To the gods add the sugar, stirring it in well; then put in the flour (but stir it lightly). Add lemon, and bake at once.
