MARRIED, in Escanaba, by the Rev. B. S. Taylor, assisted by Rev. O. E. Olander, on Saturday, June 2, 1883, Gustaf Lindquist and Carrie Haggblad, both of Metropolitan.

CAPT. FRIESE's big wooden ship, the Golden Age, is finally affoat and in tow of the steambarge Wm. Edwards. She is 300 feet long, over all, 39 feet six inches wide and 21 feet six in depth, and is expected to carry 130,000 bushels of corn on 14 feet of water.

ESCANABA Division, No. 1, A. O. H., will give a ball at Music hall on the evening of July 4. The arrangements were made and the hall secured as long ago as Monday, May 21, and the announcement should have been made at the time, but was neglected by the committee whose duty it was, until too late for insertion in last week's PORT.

RED JACKET, Houghton county, is provided with water-works, and the Houghtonites are moving in the matter. How far behind the other cities and villages is Escanaba content to be? Shall the common-sense of the majority direct matters, or shall a few chronic kickers and hang-backs, and a few who "run wid" der masheen" defeat it? That's alv size of the question.

THE ladies of St. Stephen's (Episcopal) society will give a strawberry festival on Friday evening, June 15, at the Tilden house diningroom, and when our young men consider that the ladies represent a society weak in numbers and are doing their best to make it strong and useful, surely none of them will hesitate to attend and be liberal in their expenditures for ice cream, strawberries and indigestion. We shall be there, if we live until the 15th and take our chance of a gastric convulsion.

"THE World" will be at Music hall on Thursday evening next, and "the rest of mankind" will be there to see it. It is an ambitious manager that undertakes to show "the round world" on any stage, and it will be worth the cost of a reserved seat to see what sort of a world he packs around and sets spinning for our amusement, The press speaks well of the show in the towns it has visited, and we will, after we have seen it, if we find

IF THE question of economy in expenditure were the only one to be considered; if the benefits to the city other than that of protection against fire are left out of the discussion entirely, still the substitution of a water-works system for steamers is to be preferred. The steamer we now have, taking into account her original cost, subsequent additions, repairs and shelter (two houses), has cost the village between $15,000 and $16,000 in ten years. It is now proposed to purchase another and more costly steamer, which will involve the building of another house (it would be foolish to station the two at the same point) and the putting in of "water-gangs" in the western and southwestern wards-in all an expenditure of not less than $10,000 and probably of $12,000 or $13,000, and a doubling (necessarily) of the current expenses of the fire department. If it be done the city will have no less than $25,000 in fire engines, and will be involved in an expense, annually, of not less than $2,000 for wages alone. This sum will be more than sufficient to put in a complete system of waterworks, and the sum named for salaries will very nearly cover the total expense, annual of working them. The engines earn nothing; the works would earn something above the cost of operating them. The fire department must be supported out of the public fundsthe works would support themselves and contribute something to the public funds. It we buy the second engine we swamp the treasury for this year at any rate; if we decide upon greatest drawback and difficulty by giving the works and issue twenty-year bonds, we them a prompt and bountiful supply of water leave the treasury in good condition for other | and relieving them of the necessity of hauling old steamer would provide the first contribu- crease their efficiency by enabling them to get tion to the sinking fund. to be transacted at St. Paul, remember the THE big rain of last Saturday night and Sunday quenched the forest fires all about us and cleared the air of smoke. Dangers from these fires may now be considered over until

ONE fine double-wall, double-door safe and the property belonging to the county, rendered unnecessary by the completion of the court house, is to be sold. See the advertisement, and see the safe at the county clerk's office.

MARSHAL McCARTHY ran in half-a-dozen men and youngsters, belligerents, from whom Mr. Justice Wright collected fines varying from $4 to $10, and one impecunious cuss who will work out under direction of the street commissioner, his fine for being drunk and disorderly.

WHATEVER else you forget, don't allow it to escape your memory that Remenyi, the greatest living violinist, will appear at Music hall on Saturday evening next, June 16. Again, don't say "next time" but take the chance while you have it to hear a really great artist-a master of the instrument, secure your seats at once.

THE finishing touches upon and the furnishing of the court house are now in progress. The contractor for the tuck-pointing, H. H. Thompson, of Chicago, arrived on Thursday, and the committee met on the same day to arrange about the furniture for the court room and offices. The work on the walls will occupy about a month.

THE schooner Ketchum got ashore on Round Island, in the big bay, on Monday, The captain came here for a tug to pull him off, but the Owen was busy, the Pilot was at Cedar river, the Brower somewhere else, and he had to go to Ford River. As we hear nothing further and Capt. Colwell, on Wednesday, reports no vessel there, we conclude that he got the help he needed.

In Oconto the common council takes no of those who take too much booze and forbids liquor-dealers to furnish them with liquorpublishes their names in the papers of the city. and assumes the position of guardians towards them. Seems a bit queer to us, but it is the Oconto way, we suppose. The Reporter makes note of the fact, asserts that there are those who disregard the mandate of the council, and cries "seek 'em."

IN PURSUANCE of the resolution of the counil, a gentleman connected with the Chicago water-works and fully competent to advise concerning and estimate the cost of a system for our city has been engaged to visit us in connection therewith. He is expected here to-day, Saturday, and his opinions and estimates will be submitted to a public meeting to be called at the council room, as soon as he has them ready, probably on Monday evening.

SEE the cost of the fire department, as shown n another place, and consider the comparative cost of a system of water-works. As a saving of money, merely, leaving out the convenience and sanitary benefits, the water-works should be adopted at once. To be sure, the water-works won't wear red shirts or give fourth-of-July dances, but we can have the red shirt and the dances, all the same, and the work of the fire companies will be simplified and their efficiency increased by the adoption of the water-works plan.

We no not wish to be considered as carning it, or finding fault with the fire department. It has, in spite of extreme difficulties, done good service in the past, and will no doubt, as hose companies, do good service in the future. IWe do not by any means, propose to dispense with our firemen in proposing water-works; on the a stream upon a fire before the fire gets away

GEORGE W. PARKER, an employe of the Northwestern railway company, fell from a morning train in the yard at Iron River on Monday, May 28, and was so injured that he died on the Friday following, June 1. His body was brought to Escanaba for burial in the trainmen's lot at Lakeview. He had no relatives here, and few acquaintances, having been on the division only a couple of weeks, though he had been in the company's employ a year. His former hailing-place was Martinsburg, West Va., and he is supposed to have relatives there.

THE fathers tackled the cow-question on Tuesday evening, as the ordinance herein published, shows,. They did not do enough (perhaps it was unreasonable to expect that they should-there being no milkman among them) but we are duly thankful for so much and modestly hopeful of more. The fathers may, in time, come to perceive that the streets of a city are no more properly a pasture than a paddock-that "bossy" is as much out of place therein by day as by night, in which hope we rest, and watch our footsteps lest we

FELIX LABRIOLA, one of our escaped criminals, was again lodged in the jail on Thursday. He was apprehended at Metropolitan and a telegram sent to Sheriff Oliver, who provided for his return hither. His shoulder shows the mark of the shot received while escaping from the sheriff and his assistant at Calumet mine, last winter, the wound not having yet healed. It is to be hoped that means will be taken to keep him safely until Judge Grant can consign him to a term at Jackson. Iron may hold him-wood is not to be depended upon.

THE council seems determined (as the proceedings show) to buy another fire steamer, and the people of the third and fourth wards demand that it shall, when purchased, be stationed at some point "on the hill," a demand so just that we do not see how the council can resist it. This will involve the necessity of a second engine house and a number of "water-gangs" or other sources of a supply of water-the organization of another company and the employment of another engineer; in short an expenditure (including the cost of the encontrary we propose to relieve them of their gine) of half enough to put a water-works system in operation, and when all has been done we shall be but little better off than we are now as regards protection against fire. necessary improvements, and the sale of the a heavy machine through our sand; to in- All this buying of fire apparatus can have but one end; viz., the organization of a paid de-partment, to make it effective. It is a bulky volume of more than a thousand pages and is profusely illustrated with maps, wood cuts and lithographs, touching all branches of meteorology from a rephyr to a tornado (it gives special attention to tornadoes) and having in it much valuable information to the student of the weather.

REPORTS concerning the iron trade, from all quarters, are of a discouraging tone, but the one fact that the masters yielded to the demands of the men rather than shut down, contradicts them. If the business and the prospects for the future were really as bad and as gloomy as the reports indicate, the masters' would not have yielded-would have been glad of an excuse to suspend operations. To an outsider it would appear that the trade, while there is no speculative demand and only very narrow margins, must be profitable.

(The following lines written on a postal card

I thought I would tell You the baby is well, at in front of me sitting; With tiny brouze shoes And little short clothes, hing her grandmother kalt

With forebead so fair,
And dark brown hair,
And lips like the roses of morning;
With eyes so bright,
With love-lit light,
And cheeks that hint of the dawning.

Her slender hand
Doth hold like a band
The heart of her gray old daddy:
But by and by
I fear, on the sly,
"Twill fall to some other laddle,

From the tip of her nose
To her wee, small toes,
So shapely, soft and pearly,
She can only seem
Like ah angel's dream
Embodied in our little girlie.

Her cooing words,
Like the warble of birds,
Are wondrous soft and winning;
Her beautiful smile
I think would begulle
A demon back from sinning.

Her ears, like shells
From ocean's wells,
Just border the silken tresses;
Such is our liaby,
The winsome baby,
The sweetest of all sweet Bossies

Shall cover in sin or in sorrow;
And this angel waif,
As the angels safe,
Shall be ours in the endless to-morrow.

SO NEARLY WON!

The carriage was just turning the cor-ner of the drive where the tall evergreens grow thickest, the final shower of rice and the last old satin slipper were falling far behind it, when James Grafton realized for the first time that Lettie was gone indeed, and had left him there alone and unprotected. For him the bright June day seemed sud-denly over-clouded, and his own little domestic world strangely empty in spite of the merry chattering groups of bridal guests on his sunny lawn. In another instant the carriage had disap-peared; the bridesmaids and their at-tendant swains turned laughingly away, and sauntered off mostly in couples; for one wedding is very provocative of an-other, few things being more infectious than love-making.

James Grafton wept toward his house with a very grave face (he had been standing on the path that he might watch the carriage to the very last), and on the doorstep he met his two sisters-in-law, Mrs. Charles and Mrs. Harry, both widows, and arrayed in differing shades of iron-gray silk. It was awful to have to face them alone without that good, kind, brave Lettie who had hitherto looked so well after him and his interests, who had always stood between him and the widows. They seemed to come fearfully near to him all at once. Were they going to crush him complete-ly? Would they eat him up and pick his bones? What would they do to

James Grafton was a bachelor of forty of there-about. Lettie, his only sister, whom he had a couple of hours ago most unselfishly given away to Colonel Rathbone at the little white church at the foot of the hill, although many years younger than himself had always fought his domestic battles for him and had been quite equal to the task of defending him from any number of aggressive relatives. And James Grafton needed a protector badly, for he was the only man of his family who had ever made any money; while his brothers, after trying hard to ruin him as well as them-selves, had died penniless, leaving him thirteen nephews and nieces to care for as well as two widows, whose only jointures were a couple of very different but, to James Grafton, equally objectionable tempers. A heavy burden truly; but he and Lettie had taken it up bravely and cheerfully, and had done very much more than their duty.

But now James Graften had given Lettie away; she was gone, and the widows were standing on the doorstep saying all sorts of pretty things about the pretty wedding and charming bride. There was a great blank where Lettie had been. Oh, then, surely the widows and the thirteen children could fill it! Everything his friends said brought this thought to James Grafton's mind: but that only made the blank look blanker. Mrs. Charles and Mrs. Harry did not love each other. How could they, being the mothers of two rival clans of children? "That woman" was the term by which the one indicated the other in a general way; but to-day, as the honors of James Grafton's very picturesque little house, no one, except the keenest observer, could have told that open war raged permanently be-tween the two smiling ladies who re-ceived so graciously the parting con-gratulations of the wedding guests. James Grafton, however, knew the state of affairs only too well, and as he watched the groups on the lawn thinning, and carriage after carriage driving off, his heart sank down and down, and the blackness of darkness settled

At length all had departed except the sters-in-law and their elder children. Mrs. Charles at once began to explore the house which during Lettie's reign she had never been able to do quite to er heart's content; and Mrs. Harry followed her stealthily about, as a de-tective might watch a suspected thief. As for James Grafton, he groped his melancholy way into his library.

"Ha! what's this?" he exclaimed with sudden joy, as his eyes fell upon a note lying upon his desk. "From Lette! Dear girl! How thoughtful!" He cagerly tore open the envelope. It already appeared to him as if she had been gone some centuries. The note had det Dear girl! How thoughtful!" He agerly tore open the envelope. The note had een gone some centuries and miles of smiling, undulating English landscape, full of infinite calm and gentleness. How it happened I can not say; but as James Grafton waked soberly through the lane, all heavitation fled sway, and his face grew are rever. I see they don't mean to go. The inevitable of the young married man, as James Grafton.

Why doubt?"

Beyond the low hedges there were intensely relieved by the interruption of a threatening bright hand, he had thrust hastily into his pocket. Mrs. Charles wrote to him regularly every day. On one day she after the awful affair of yesterday. I'm ago and angel, the next a demon; it was the furn for being a demon now. He was so entirely upset believed what she said, which was not they made brick enough last season in the believed what she said, which was not what he did very often. Mrs. Harry's child's croup turned out to be something and miles of smiling, undulating the fact.

"You are a good fellow to turn up after the awful affair of yesterday. I'm and the bache-heat the awful affair of yesterday. I'm and the bache-heat the awful affair of yesterday. "Weddings are such a sell," growled the young married man, as James Grafton, with its strange and winning touch of pur

How happy I should be if I could only feal you were in good hands. Believe me, dear, she is a most sweet thing—With fondest love, your own Lettie." James Grafton had always had a fair and rather delicate complexion. It was not much the worse for wear. It turned a vivid scarlet as he read the last part of his sister's note. of his sister's note.

James Gafton, this bachelor of forty years, sighed with almost youthful fer-vor for his second. "She likes you; I am sure of it.' Aye, there's the rub! 'Likes—likes—likes me,'" he repeated, "but perhaps still loves some one on the other side of the world. Does she? Why shouldn't I know?" "

He read Lettie's note through again; it was singularly inspiring; never before had the case been put before him so clearly, never had he dared, even in his inmost thoughts, to put it so clearly to himself. He opened his eyes widely. "Have I been a fool, I won-der? I must have been or I should have— But here he was roughly in-terrupted. Mrs. Charles's girls and Mrs. Harry's boys, who always had the greatest contempt for each other, had come to blows, and now burst into the library crying and sobbing, and making the house resound with their clamorous demands for instant justice. The mothers, who had been harrying each other until frail human nature could stand it no longer, rushed to the rescue. The noise became terrific. Mrs. Charles demanded the immediate expulsion of "that woman and her ill-mannered childreas" Mrs. Harry returned the compliment with vigor. James Grafton, unused to such scenes, fled in dismay. They followed him to the shrubbery, and when they had driven him thence they tracked him to the poultry-yard, where, rendered desperate by sheer despair, he turned upon them and declared he would not re-enter the house until both had left it. There was something so resolute in the way in which he sat down on some logs by the pump, as if he would stay there forever sooner than yield, that, knowing further resistance was useless, the widows departed. For many hours afterward James Grafton felt that he was the greatest brute in the world. He was, as regarded women and children, [a most tender-hearted creature. He hated himself for his harshness; it made him feel degraded next day before his self-respect returned. James Grafton's house was pleasantly situated on the slope of a hill, not many miles from London. Eunice Bell lived with a married sister in Tuliptree-lane, within an easy walk of the bachelor's residence. James Grafton, being on intimate terms to be married. Then there had been a quarrel, and estrangement. He, the lover, had gone abroad; she-why one day she caught sight of her own face in the looking-glass, and repeated to herand unworthy even to woo so sweet a being as Eunice Bell. It was far in the Charlotte, when she saw her lover Borne before her on a shutter, Like a well-conducted person, Went on cutting bread and butter.

Other people said she went on living the same simple, helpful, beautiful life that she always had lived. There was a difference to her in the aspect of things, doubtless; but if there were she never made others feel it. But now then that broken romance was all over. But there are some events which never recede into the past; they live forever in a perpetual now, although one may agree with one's self to behave as if they had never occurred.

Now, James Grafton had had broken romance of his own in early life. Gentle Death had taken his "Lenore," leaving a wound in his heart which, although deep, had no bitterness in it. So it had healed very fairly; it was deference to Miss Bell's feelings, not his own, that had kept him silent hitherto, for in truth he was very much in love with her, and had been for some time past. James Grafton had promised to dine in Tulip-tree lane the day after his sister's wedding. He read Lettie's note over three times before he started.

"It's that 'likes' that makes me hesitate," he said to himself, as he began to descend the hillside by a broad highway. "Or perhaps," he ventured to hope presently, "perhaps the 'like' was only Lettie's modest way of putting 'loves.' Lettie was always so modest. Yes, yes, it may be so; but no! it won't do. I'm a fool for thinking so. And yet-why not?" And his thoughts recurred to that other time when he had asked his Lenore what he now wanted to ask Eunice Bell. That other time-ah! then he had been young, impetuous, madly in love. Then he had had no need to ask himself questions; then he had been only too sure. Now, going down the hill to the house where Eunice Bell lived, he was full of doubts and fears and hesitations, "Yet why not?" he asked himself, as he turned the corner into Tulip-tree lane. He had grown very fond of that lane. As he turned the well-known corner it was to him as if he were in the presence of a familiar friend and counselor; it was as if he had asked—"Yet why young couple who haunt the lane passed im; he did not covet their happiness as him; he did not covet their happiness as he had often done; he was too happy himself. A turn of the road showed him the house where Eunice Bell lived; a large old-fashioned house, dignified but homelike. From the lawn rose a stately cedar. Beside the dark cedar was a great tulip-tree covered with pale blossoms. The voices of children at play reached him from behind the old red wall of the garden. With them came—Ah! what was that? Her voice. James Grafton felt his pulse quicken as ha hastened his steps toward the house. In fancy he saw her cut there under the of his sister's note.

"How on earth could she have guessed? What have I said or done to suggest such an idea? 'Believe me dear, she is a most sweet thing.' I knew that well enough without Lettie's he could but seize it! And eagerly, as telling me. 'I'm fond of her; so are you.'" And in spite of having lost a first love "whom the angels call Lenore," or some other delicious name, James Gaften, this backelor of forty.

While James Grafton had been coming through the lane the object of his thoughts and affections, Eunice Bell, had been sitting, just as he had imagined, and as he had often seen her, within the shadow of the great trees. She was dressed for dinner, in a half-toilet of some soft dove-colored, summer-like fabric. She was ten years younger than James Grafton, although for the last two years she had considered herself distinctly an old maid. Her hair was soft and fair. Her figure tall and slight—a little too slight perhaps. Her face was very placid. At the moment James Grafton had turned into the lane it was grave as well as placid. Presently (it was because she knew by the striking of the church clock that he must be coming nearer?) a thought made her smile. She was thinking of James Grafton then; telling herself she liked him, feeling that somehow or another the idea of being always an old maid was imperceptibly melting. "Is it only friendship just touched with sentiment, or does he really care for me?"

The question pleased her but she knew the answer perfectly well; she knew he cared for her. Then she sighed; her lips half curled with scorn, but not scorn for him. No one (except his sister-in-law) could regard James Grafton with anything but profound respect.
"Rest, trustfulness and love! Ah! I have sometimes thought them idle words; but to see the smile of this good man is to know"—

She never finished the sentence. "Auntie! auntie! see, there's Mr. Grafton," a little voice cried gleefully; and Eunice Bell, raising her eyes, which had been fixed on the grass at her feet, saw James Grafton crossing the lawn, and the children all scampering toward him as fast as their chubby legs could carry them. Eunice rose and followed them, laughing gently at the earnest-ness with which the little things rifled his pockets of those sweets which a many-nephewed-and-nieced man never without, if he knows his duty and

So they, Eunice and James (after all, forty is not so very great an age)—they were both laughing when they met. It was pleasant, very pleasant—in fact, quite delightful; but, somehow before that gentle domestic laughter, sentiment fled abashed. They were out in the garden one quarter of an hourwith the family, knew, as, indeed, all the neighborhood knew, that about two years ago Miss Bell had been engaged the trees, while the evening sunbeams the distribution on the distribution of the time being, not on speaking terms.

After dinner Mrs. Cathcart, by way played upon the softly fluttering leaves. The children prattled about their knees. Their glances met with kind, familiar smiles. Eunice felt a contented restfulness in his presence, and he was conscious that it was so. It was to him a most golden, blissful quarter of an hour. But of course he could not say what he wished before the children, and there was all the beautiful long evening be-fore them, and no need to hurry. Presently, after sunset, he and she would stroll out there, and then-he felt certain now, absolutely sure, that she would answer Ycs. As absolutely sure as I am at this minute that had he asked her to be his wife during that happy quarter of an hour she would have accepted him with the frankest smile of perfect trust. The gong sounded for dinner. They sauntered up to the house side by side, the children still playing about their path.

"I always feel whenever I come here that you have all attained to the ideal state of domestic peace and happiness," said James Grafton, thoughtfully. "After the stormy scenes one is sometimes called upon to witness" (he thought of yesterday and the sisters-inlaw), "the sweet, calm atmosphere pervading the entire home-life here is most soothing.'

"We get on very well together," said Eunice, in her soft, placid voice.
"Your sister and her husband are, I think, the most admirable young couple I ever met. They never wrangle. By the way, I haven't asked how they were. How are they?"

"Oh, as flourishing as usual," returned Eunice, "I wonder they haven't been in the garden. They generally like to be out here during the children's half-hour, as we call the half-hour before

So saying they entered the house together-that house the bachelor had now for some time held so sacred. They entered by the draw-ing-room window, which opened on to the lawn. They rather surprised Mrs. Cathcart, the young and lovely wife, diligently reading a novel on the sofa, and her gallant husband apparently absorbed in the evening pa-per, immediately behind her. They were, in fact, back to back. And this was the more remarkable, as the honeymoon ways of this charming couple had often been a subject of comment among their friends. They were both reading so diligently that Mr. Grafton and Miss Bell had quite time enough to take in the coup d'ail and its meaning before either husband and wife moved. A moment afterward they both started. Catheart sprang up blithely to meet his guest as if he were intensely relieved by the interruption of a threatening tele-a-tete.

olth it!" said Mrs. Catheart, knitting her pretty brows and rising, pressing one hand to her forehead as she did so.

There had been times, and those distant but a few brief hours ago, when such words and such a movement of pain would have wrung her husband's heart, and his "My darling! what can I do for it?" would have sounded perfectly agonizing; now, the wretched being only turned abruptly to his sisterin-law with, "Come, Eunice; dinner's late enough already," and marched off with her buffly. with her huffly.

"I am sorry you are so unwell. The day has been oppressive. You will be glad to get down to the sea side, won't you?" said James Grafton, as he gave his arm to the too-evidently snubbed

"And your decorations are charming these trailing bits of briony and "Don't agree with you, Grafton. I'm sick of seeing the place littered with weeds," interpolated Catheart, the young married man, with an angry sniff, as they took their places at table. "John," he exclaimed, turning to the servant, "see that there's something decent out of the conservatory in the centre of the table to-morrow-something at least three feet high, and bushy John, as he went about his work with imperturbable gravity, remembered with great inward mirth that only a few days before he had been ordered to remove a tall fern, because, as his master had said, it hid his wife's face. "Rum'uns, married folks, ain't they?" he remarked to himself. Ah, indeed they are, especially when young, good-looking and very much in love with each other! But their 'rum'-ness, Oh, worthy John, strange as it is, is as nothing to their utter want of consideration for other people's feelings.

What James Grafton and Eunice Bell suffered at that little square dinner I really have not the heart to relate in detail; and, indeed, there is but small need that I should do so, for have not you and I taken a melancholy part in many only too similar scenes? I could, however, forgive the young couple for their conduct during dinner; but what I consider absolutely brutal and unpardonable was that although I feel pertain both Captain and Mrs. Catheart knew that James Grafton would have enjoyed a quiet stroll about the grounds when the sun was setting (for of course he was on a certain subject as easy for them to read as the morning paper), yet these two selfish married creatures, absorbed only in the interesting game of irritating each other, hung on to the two unmarried ones the whole evening with a relentless malice that is perfectly unattainable except by a husband and of pretending she did not care, rattled off her gayest dance-music and sang dozens of her brightest songs; but nothing would please her except to have Eunice sitting quite close to her, turning over the pages. Once, indeed, Miss Bell ventured as far as the window, but she was speedily captured; a sisterly arm being gently but firmly placed round her waist, while a plaintive voice murmured in her ear: "Ah, Eunice! a only thing in the world one can really depend upon!"

And while this was going on in the drawing room Cathcart had effectually button-holed Grafton, and was confiding to him that as his domestic life had suffered an utter collapse he intendedindeed, it was his only chance of saving his life and reason-he intended to exchange with Hutchings, and go to seek glory and, he devoutly hoped, death in South Africa.

But the wretched evening must at last come to an end. About ten o'clock James Grafton again found himself in Tulip-tree lane; but instead of the happy calm of a few hours earlier, he now felt as if he had been assisting at an earthquake. He was quite dazed, and unable to contemplate anything at all except the extraordinary ways of married people, at which he gazed, so to speak, with mingled wonder, terror and anger. Should he ever be able to reenter that house, that desecrated sanctnary? It was, however, a sweet, peaceful night; so that by the time he had reached his own door he had so far recovered himself as to see that it was his bounden duty to rescue Eunice Bell from-good Heavens! it was maddening to think what she might be enduring that very minute. He entered his house as soon as he had made up his mind, while taking an extra stroll or two in front of it, that nothing should hinder him from going over to Tulip-tree lane first thing in the morning and taking circum-stances firmly in hand.

Now one might perhaps get along fairly if one had merely to deal with the circumstances that properly belong to a case, if it were not for the collateral circumstances that are always lying in ambush on both sides of our path ready to spring out and eat up both us and our case. James Grafton found a letter and a telegram awaiting him. He tore open the telegram; it was from Mrs. Harry. Her youngest child had been suddenly seized with croup. James must come at once and bring a physician with him. James went at once and took a physician with him. On his way down he read the letter which, recogniz-ing Mrs. Charles's only too well-known however, he was again waiking down Tulip-tree lane, thinking that this time no domestic complication should pre-vent his saying his say, when who should vent his saying his say, when who should he meet but Mr. and Mrs. Catheart arm in arm, conversing with most lover-like actions on a subject that any one could see was deep, interesting and amusing!

They looked so lover-like that James

Rotation of Crops.

Why does a farmer change the crops of each field every year, growing first clover and grass and then corn, then oats, and lastly, wheat or rye, and again seeding down to clover and grass? It is because he knows that these crops succeed better when thus grown, and that he can not grow the same crop every year on the same ground with profit. There is a good reason for this. It is because the nature of each of these different crops is not the same ; that one seems to rest the soil, that clover actually leaves the soil better than it was before, besides adding to it in the shape of roots, stems and leaves, a large quan-tity of valuable plant food for the corn which follows it; that the culture of corn kills a vast quantity of weeds, cleans the ground, and prepares it for the oats and wheat; that after the oats have been grown the soil has given up to that crop all the strength it possessed, and that it then requires help to restore it. This is given by the manure and fertilizers used to prepare for the wheat or rye and the clover and grass after it, and that by this treatment one can go on year after year for a whole life-time. on year after year, for a whole life-time, growing crops, and then leave his farm still fertile and useful for his children, who may do the same, to be followed again by their children.

This method of culture is called the rotation of crops, and the usual rota-tion consists of the four crops mentioned, viz.: clover and grass, corn,oats, and wheat. This is called the fourcourse system. Some farmers add oth er crops and so lengthen the course with great benefit to the soil; because in the four-course system there is too much grain and too little fodder for feeding cattle and making manure, without which good crops can not be grown. There are also not enough of the renovating crops, as those are called in which either the soil is manured or rested and restored, or in fact renewed in strength and power to produce the other crops which take more from the soil, and are therefore called exhaustive. For the principle at the bottom of this system of rotation is chiefly this: That the farmer must follow an exhaustive crop with a renovating one; that is, one that is hard or difficult to grow with one that is easy, and so give the soil an op portunity to recover before its strength is taxed too much. Much injury has been done to many farms by an unwise neglect of this precaution and crops of wheat and corn have been grown year after year, until the soil has been made unable to produce enough to pay the farmer for his labor, or to support him and his family with comfort. It is in this way that farms have been worn out and people sister's affection—love—is, after all, the bave been forced to go further west to only thing in the world one can really get new land, that the same wasteful practice may be followed. Now that the West is becoming filled up and the best lands are occupied, this can no longer be done, and farmers are obliged to follow a more skillful practice and are forced to study more carefully the nature of their business that they may make their farms more productive. The feeding of cattle and sheep is the most important part of the farm work, and the growing of feeding crops there-fore needs to be made a special study by the young farmer. A rotation, then, which can be made to include the largest number of feeding crops, is the best. A seven-course rotation is sometimes practiced in which clover and grass are grown one year for hay and a second year for pasture followed by corn, oats, roots (either turnips or mangels) barley, clover for hay, and wheat on the clover sod, followed by grass. This rotation has many advantages. It has two cultivated or cleaning crops, oorn and roots; two sods plowed under, and four feeding crops, viz: corn, roots and two hay crops. Where it can be followed it enables the farmer to keep a flock of sheep or to keep cows and a dairy which is one of the most profitable and pleasant parts of farming, and gives the girls an agreeable opportunity of adding to the income of the farm and to their own resources, by making butter, as well as finds employment for the boys, which is not so laborious as the constant raising of grain. When the rotation is chosen, the farm is di-vided into fields to suit the course, five for the four-course, in which there are two in grass at the same time, and eight for the seven-course rotation .- Henry Stewart, in Country Gentleman.

Farming North and South.

The Southern farmer is now being told that he remedy for all his hardships lies in variety of crops. If nothing but cotton is raised, of course corn and wheat and hav must be bought; as matter of fact they are bought from the North, and the North has achieved prosperity with mixed farming, while the South with its single crop is poor and in debt. So the planters are urged to raise more grain and pigs and less cot-ton, and an increase in the acreage of wheat and corn is paraded as the surest sign of a State's prosperity.

But in the North the tendency is directly the other way. The old plan here was for the farmer to raise upon his own land almost everything he required, and for him and his wife to work with their own hands almost everything they used and wore as well, but this rule has been more and more departed from until in recent years special farming has come in which furnishes counterparts to the "all cotton" plantations. Take the New England dairymen. They buy wheat and corn from the West, often all they use, and one man in an out-of-the-way Vermont town has profitably devoted his acres to grass and bought potatoes for his own table. There is a growing feeling here that mixed farming is profitless, except in a degree necessary for economical management, and that in the competition which has come with railroads and modern appliances there is little chance of success without taking advantage of the division of labor, in the wider sense, which is brought about by "specialties.

The fact is that, North and South, the question is merely one of economy, and not of principle. It is certain that some Vermont farmers who feed Illinois corn to their cows make more money than others who raise their own and plainly more than the farmer could by raising it himself; and that ends the argument. It cost money to carry corn from Chicago to New England or Georgia, and each section and each farmer must determine whether it is cheaper to raise it, or to raise something to buy it with. Because the cotton planters are not generally prosperous it is not necessary to blindly adopt farming as a cure-all. The South has a change in progress akin to that which has left the old-fashioned farmers in our own "hill towns" wondering that the old methods do not bring the old "How do I make both 'ends meet?" " said a substantial North Carolina farmer the other day, "I use improved machinery, manure heavily and pay cash."—Springfield (Mass.) Re-

Imported matinees of a pale daffodil yellow are elaborately embroidered in clusters of strawberries and foliago.

Yellow in lawn-tennis costumes is a leading color, and is highly effective combined with moss green or Egyptian

Pretty tea aprons are made of Oriental net, with ruffles of Oriental lace over strawberry surrah, and also of ficelle lace over pale blue satin.

It is not believed that the rose and the lily can be improved by painting, but fahsion is doing a similar thing in dying the pearl. This gem is now tinted in all the new shades to match dresses they are intended to embellish, the colors ranging from the palest cream and mauve to the deepest dyes of brown, green, and olive.

Some of the "simple and elegant" tailor-made costumes cost one hundred and twenty-five dollars each, and 'dressy'' French morning robes can be had for the same modest price, the latter being marvellous creations of finest cashmere or merveilleux, the entire fronts being a mass of silk embroidery, waves of lace and flowing ends of satin ribbon.

Evening dresses are made with an amplitude almost recalling the days of crinoline. Happily, the fullness estab-lished by French decree is confined wholly to the back, the front and sides falling straight enough. Some of the newest white skirts to be worn next the dress have a single embroidered flounce going all the way around the foot of the skirt, but in the back they are flounced nearly to the waist, each ruffle being starched very stiff when laundered.

Dancing dresses, of which softly hanging merveilleaux silk forms a component part, are sometimes arranged with a graceful drapery of the silk crossing the bodice diagonally, from shoulder to waist, and then forming a panier, while at the other side a lighter material, like tulle or gauze broche, is draped panierwise over the surah. Often a garland of field flowers borders the edge of the tulle panier. It is not easy to describe this new and pretty style, which is remarkably effective.

Sleeves for full dress are still exceedingly short, and the gloves very long. Skirts remain short enough in front to display the embroidered stocking as well as the sandal. Boots are seldom worn in the evening, and undressed kid is the favorite material for slippers, most of which have painted designs on the toes and occasionally along the sides as well. A pretty foot looks prettier with a flat decoration on the slipper than with rosettes, buckles, or any other trimming that interferes with the delicate contour of the foot. A lovely toilet of "second" mourning worn at a reception recently was made with deep Spanish lace flounces over a slip of white ottoman silk, and trimmed plentifully with white flowers. The blossoms were those of the syringa shrub, whose creamy-white petals were uncommonly effective against the inack-ground of lace. tense black l slippers were of black satin, embroidered in lilies of the valley, and the gloves, of finest black silk, reached far above the elbow. Diamond ornaments were worn with this exquisite dress, with syringa flowers in the hair.

Colored lace is much used for the trimmings of garden-party toilets. It is made in gray, olive, terracotta, cop-per, strawberry, dark green, and, in fact, nearly every shade. This trimming looks best when put on rather full, and at its poorest advantage when turned up from beneath an edge and laid flat, as occasionally is seen on the basque of a bodice. Basques more popular for these dresses are sharply pointed in front, cut away on the hips, and made square at the back, where they are heavily trimmed with ribbon and lace, in order to give the bunchedout effect, now so indispensable, just below the waist. Just now the spring weather is brilliant, and Ceneral Park affords quite a study in color, the gay costumes and red and yellow parasols presenting a marked contrast to the faint, delicate green of the follage. Yellow is certainly the rage, but when this color breaks forth on a parasol its becomingness is a question. Pale shades of yellow, especially when worn in the evening, or when toned by soft waves of creamy lace, are beautiful; but to hold yellow above the head for the sun to shine through on a bright spring day is a trying test for even a dairy-maid's rosy bloom, and total ruin to any ordinary complexion .- N. Y. Evening Post.

"It is reported that the Postmaster-General is about to make a decision in regard to that class of newspapers known as 'patent outsides,' insides, or 'co-operative,' that will necessarily cause a large number of local papers, of the smallest circulation and least influence, to suspend publication. His reason for so doing is that the papers being printed on one side in the cities, and then sold by the quire to thousands of country publishers, who print the other half at home, is sufficient evidence that such papers are not self-sustaining, and in accordance has about decided to exclude all such from the mails as second-class matter. There are about 4,000 such publications issued in this country, and if the ruling goes into effect about 3,000 would suspend, while the remaining 1,000 of the better class of 'co-operatives' would be greatly strengthened, and could then afford to publish the whole of their papers; so, in the end, the press, advertisers and the public would be greatly benefitted."

The foregoing item, which has appeared in a country paper published at Sidney, O., is another evidence of the vindictiveness of some publishers where the co-operative papers affect their re-ceipts for advertising and subscription. Section 7 of the Postal Law, approved Section 7 of the Postal Law, approved June 23, 1874, says: "That newspapers, one copy to each actual subscriber, reaiding within the county where the same are printed, in whole or in part, and published, shall go free through the mails; but the same shall not be delivered at letter-carrier offices or distributed by carriers unless postage is paid thereon as by law provided." From this it will be seen that the Postmaster-General's rulings have been anticipated by the National Congress, and the proposed decision would be illegal and of no effect.—Chicago Banner

Of Railway Appliances at Chicago, to be continued till June 23, in the great Exposition Building, including a large space under temporary cover, and occupying eleven acres of ground, is the grandest railway exhibition ever held in the world. Here are locomotives, cars, running-guar, interior furnishings, freight-car appliances, track goods, wood and iron working machinery, metals, ofis, paints, varnishes, station and office appurtenances, pumps, water-sistion and street-railway appliances, and a long list of miscellaneous goods used in the railway service. Here may be seen the first locomotive built in this country and in England, and the latest and best, showing the results of the inventive genius and experience of fifty years in railway locomotion. The leading manufacturers of the country here show their best work, inviting examination, comparison and criticism. A striking feeture of the Exposition is the large display of massive machinery working with the greatest precision and the least possible friction. Here are single exhibits large and attractive enough to make the sight-seer feel amply repaid for the cost of his visit. But multiplied indefinitely, and varied in a thousand forms over an immeuse space, the whole constitutes a colossal exhibition of railway appliances, from the largest engine and locomotive to the railroad watch and conductor's punch.

An opportunity to see such a magnificent rallway exhibition as this may not occur again in this century. It would be a great mistake to regard this exhibit as interesting mainly to railroad men. It has an interest of vast significance to the people, the products of whose labor turn the wheels of the locomotive. The value of their farms, their mills, their mines, their factories and their labor depend on the problem, how to make the best and cheapest railway service. their labor depend on the problem, how to make the best and cheapest railway service, which this Exposition is the first great public co-operative attempt to solve. And that the people, in whose true interests this Exposition is held, may see this magnificent display, the railroad companies have largely reduced their rates to all who visit it.

A SCIENTIFIC DISCOVERY.

New and Most Important Theoretic Oue of the Most Vital Questions

If any one had informed Queen Elizabeth in her palmiest days that she could have been seated in her palace in London and conversed with Sir Walter Raleigh in his North Carolina home; receiving a reply from him within an hour's time, she would from him within an hour's time, she would have declared it to be a miracle. And yet, had they lived in the present day, this apparent miracle would most readily have been witnessed and not seem at all strange or unnatural. The truth is, new principles are coming into existence, and the operation of many laws unknown in the past is being fully understood in the present. In no way does this fact come more forcibly to the mind than in the care and treatment of the human body. Millious of people have died in past ages from some insignificant or easily controlled cause which is thoroughly understood now and readily handled. Consumption during the entire past has been considered an incurable disease. And yet it is demonstrated that it has been and can be cured, even after it has had a long run. Dr. Felix Oswald has just contributed a notable article on this subject to the Popular Science Monthly. He regards consumption as pulmonary scrofula. The impurities of the blood produce a constant irritation in the lungs, thus destroying their delicate tissues and causing death. His theory shows conclusively that consumption is a blood disease. It has its origin primarily in a deranged condition of the kidneys or liver, the only two organs of the body, aside from the lungs, that purify the blood. When the kidneys or liver are diseased they are in a sore or lacerated state which communicates poison to every cunce of blood that passes have declared it to be a miracle. And yet, sore or lacerated state which communicates poison to every ounce of blood that passes through them. This poisonous blood circulates through the system and comes to the lungs, where the poison is deposited, causing decomposition in the finely formed cells of the lungs. Any diseased part of the body has contaminating power, and yet the blood, which is the life of the system, the blood, which is the life of the system, is brought into direct contact with these poisoned organs, thus carrying contagion to all parts of the body. Bishop Jesse T. Peck, D. D., LL. D., whose death has been so recently regretted, is reported to have died of pneumonia, which medical authorities affirm indicates a diseased condition of the kidneys. It is well known, moreover, that for several years he had been the victim of severe kidney trouble, and the pneumonia which finally terminated his life was tim of severe kidney trouble, and the pneu-monia which finally terminated his life was only the last result of the previous blood poisoning. The deadly matter which is left in the lungs by the impure blood clogs up and finally chokes the patient. When this is accomplished rapidly it is called pneu-monia or quick consumption; when slowly, consumption, but in any event it is the re-sult of impure blood, caused by diseased kidneys and liver.

These are facts of science, and vouched

These are facts of science, and vouched for by all the leading physicians of the day. They show the desirability—nay, the necessity, of keeping these most important organs in perfect condition, not only to in-sure health, but also to escape death. It has been fully shown, to the satisfaction of has been fully shown, to the satisfaction of nearly every unprejudiced mind, that Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure is the only known remedy that can cure and keep in health the great blood-purifying organs of the body. It acts directly upon these members, healing all ulcers which may have formed in them and placing them in a condition to purify and not poison the blood. This is no idle statement nor false theory. Mr. W. C. Beach, foreman of the Buffalo, N. Y., Rubber Type Foundry, was given up to die by both physicians and friends. For four years he had a terrible cough, accompanied by night sweats, chills, and all the well known symptoms. He spent a season South and found no relief. He says: "I finally concluded to try Warner's Safe Cure and in three months I gained twenty pounds, recovered my lost gained twenty pounds, recovered my lost energy and my health was fully restored." The list could be prolonged indefinitely but enough has been said to prove to every sufferer from pulmonic troubles, that there is no reason to be discouraged in the least, and that health can be restored.

She tried many so-called remedies without aveil, growing rapidly worse, when her attention was called to Hunt's Remedy. She purchased a bottle from Lowell's drug store, in Cambridgeport, and after taking the first does she began to feel easier, she could steep well, and after continuing its use a short time the severe pains in her back and side entirely disappeared, and she is a well woman. Many of our relatives and friends have used Hunt's Remedy with the most gratifying results. I have recommended it many times, and as many times heard the same story. Hunt's Remedy is all that is claimed for it, and a real blessing to all afflicted with kidney or liver trouble."

Mr. C. O. Weinelde, No. M Austin Street, Cambridgeport, Mast., makes the following remarkable statement. On April 27, 1883, he writes as follows: "I have been troubled with kidney disease for nearly twenty years. Have suffered at times with terrible pains in my back and limbs. I used many medicines, pains in my back and limbs. I used many inculciones, but found nothing reached my case until I took Hunt's Remedy. I purchased a bottle of A. P. Hunt's Remedy did wonders for me, and I have no bestancy in recomwonders for me, and I have no hesitancy in recom ending it to all afflicted with kidney or liver disease menong it to an amoved with kinney of liver cases, as I am positive that by its use they will find immediate relief. "BILLY McGLORY's place" is one of the vilest dens in New York, a place not (heretofore) to be mentioned to ears polite, but the home missionary society or some other efflorescence of protestant christianity has made it the common talk of the town-has made it known throughout the country. Religious services of the Moody-Sankey sort are now held therein on Sunday evening, and the proprietor and his place and business has received twenty thousand dollars' worth of free advertising. Silly, awfully silly, on the part of the missionary people, but nuts for Billy.

IT is laughable to hear the iron ore nabobs on the Menominee range howl in favor of "protection for American labor," while they employ only Swedes and Cornishmen .- Cres-

It would be a waste of labor to attemp to drive an idea into the head of the writer of that paragraph, but it may pay, perhaps, to suggest to others that those "Swedes and Cornishmen" are not subjects of Oscar II, of Sweden and Norway, or Victoria, queen of Great Britain and Ireland. They are citizens, present or prospective, of the United States of America; they breath American air, eat American food, pay American taxes, prefer American institutions, educate their children in American schools, acquire American homes, and are, as truly as though they had been born in Wisconsin, American laborers. All this they know, and we know, and Ryan, of the much knowledge. Being an intellectual dyspeptic, and so incapable of digesting or assimflating facts, he can be pardoned and pitied.

"THE Outlook political" was the heading of a well-written and thoughtful article in the last issue of the Grand Haven Herald wherein the editor reviews the disasters which have overtaken the republican party in the statethe loss of five congressional districts, the governorship and the judges and regents-gives the reasons (as he understands them) for these losses, and points out the steps necessary to the recovery of republican ascendancy in the state. The reasons-the reason rather; there was but one-for the falling off of the republican vote was the disgust and anger of the party at the outrageous and unrepublican course of the minority of the party in the senatorial contest; the "rule or ruin" tactics of the Hubbell faction and its newspaper allies, at the head of which was the Post & Tribune, and the "steps in the way of recovery, pointed out are "a change in the spirit, tone, temper, utterance and act" of those newspapers and repentance and a return by the bolters to republican methods and party fealty; oblivion, for the past, and unity of action and purpose for the future. Good counsel, but addressed to parties that will not listen, as witness the utterances of Mr. James F. Joy, interviewed by a representative of the Chicago Times, and the interview given in that paper on Saturday last. Mr. Joy exults in the course pursued by himself and his colleagues in the senatorial contest, in what he calls the defeat of Ferrysan--meaning merely the defeat of the will of a large majority of the party by a few factions "bosses," the substitution of the will of a few individuals whose only strength in the party is the money they contribute, for the will of the voters-insolently puts forward the name of the leader of that faction as "a better man than Ferry," and assumes for him and them the future leadership of the party which their course has already wrecked. We believe as firmly as does the Herald, that the state is largely republican in sentiment and that its vote can be thrown for the candidate of the republican party in '84, but we do not believe that conciliation, "forgetfulness," or even a change in the editorial management of the Post & Tribune, are measures to that end. A stern rebuke is what is needed. The "reduction to the ranks" of the Hubbells and Joys. and the utter repudiation as party exponents of the newspapers, from Detroit to Traverse Bay, that supported the bolt of last winter, will do more to reinhabilitate Michigan republicanism than all the "conciliation" possible. In fact: the free traders want done as before. there is no conciliation possible. Habbellism must be destroyed, root and branch, or it will plete the destruction of republicanism.

FREE-TRADERS are at present an unknown and despised quantity in the politics of this country.-News, Detroit.

True, and rightly so. They are deadly enemies of the country's prosperity-fees of the wage-earner, that is to say of ninety-nine out of every hundred of the population of the U. S., and ought to-be, if not unknown, both "despised" and hated.

Provided that such testimony shall be given in open court, and that such testimony shall not be received in support or defense of a charge of adultery."

BISMARCK booms, now. The capital commission in session at Fargo, on Saturday last, decided unanimously upon Bismarck as the future capital of the territory. The action is said to look to a division of the territory on the 46th parallel of latitude and the erection of gress. The handy sum ($1,000,000) placed at the disposal of the commission by the capitalists who own Bismarck and the adjoining country had, perhaps, as much to do with the selection as anything. > THERE are free-traders and free-traders, as the gathering at Detroit, last week, made evident. The only free trader, pure and simple; the only whole-hog free-trader is the English or European manufacturer. Every so-called free-trader resident in America, proves, on being tried, a free-trader with a "saving clause;" a free-trader as to other men's interests but a protectionist as regards his own. The iron master wants free pig but a good tariff on bar, hoop, or other iron; the furnaceman is constant in his demand for free ores, but can not exist unless pig is protected; and so with the other trades. There are no (or so few as to be not worth counting) American free-traders.

AFTER all their declarations to the con trary-all their assertions that they wanted to shut down for the summer and could not. without loss, submit to the demands of the men, agreed to terms proposed by the amalgamated societies and signed the wage scale presented. By so doing they averted a strike or lock-out, and the country will rejoice, but they have done more; they have admitted by accepting the scale, that their assertions were false; that the demands of the men were not such as they could not accept without loss; that, in short, they had been "bluffing," and were caught at it. Now, we hope, the busines will go on, the demand for ore increase and we have a fairly prosperous year after all. The mills at Cincinnati, Covington and Newport, 5 in number, did shut down. In the case of these mills the men demanded more than was demanded by the men at Pittsburg, but will probably accept the same, and the mills resume. The Bayview mills, at Milwaukee also shut down, but as the only point at issue, other than those decided at Pittsburg, is the demand of the men for semi-monthly pay-days, it is not probable that the strike at that point will be long continued.

A GENTLEMAN who has been there, and returned, has this to say of Dakota and of the rush of emigration thither. The PORT has always, its editor having seen something of the territory, did what it could to counteract the effects of the interested and mendacious statements of the railway companies and speculators concerning Dakota, and gives place to a portion of the gentleman's statements. It declines, however, to "boom" a rival locality, as requested by the pany which sent it the letter. Its terms for advertising are ten cents a line.

Dakota has been advertised extensively throughout the eastern and middle states and in Europe as a veritable land of promise. Northern Dakota, on the line of the Northern Pacific railroad, made an excellent record for a number of years in wheat raising, and lands have been sold there for from $20 to $80 per acre, but a reaction is now setting in in that section. Business in the older towns is stagnant. The crops the past two years have not been what could be desired. Constant wheat raising must of necessity tell on the productiveness of the most fertile farms, and they are just begining to realize that they can not draw continually from a cask without putting something in. Towns have sprung up on the line of that road as if in a night, and have done a rushing business for a while. They have risen with all the blaze and display of a rocket, and they are just now beginning

Southern Dakota, where the principal part of immigration is now tending, is sadly de-ficient in both grass and good water. In parts of this section the grass is very short and scanty, and the water is either not to be had, scanty, and the water is either not to be had, or is villainously bad in quality. Claims in southeastern Dakota are selling for from $1,000 to $1,200 which simply gives the purchaser the right to go on the land and comply with the government requirements by a five years' residence. Government lands can only be had by pushing out to the frontier beyond the pale of schools, churches, competing markets and many other advantages which are alike necessary to success and comfort in life. Persons with families can not afford to be carried out to the verwe of civilization, there to ried out to the verge of civilization, there to bring up their families where it is a moral certainty that the advantages and comforts of Irish C civilized life will not overtake them in the in An

WE FIND the following concerning the Cleveland ore market:

The ore market presents about the same condition that has existed for the last two or three months. It is rumored that one company has placed all its stock on hand and an anticipated production with a central Ohio pig iron furnace, but the rumor can not be traced to genuine authority. Yet it is a fact that several furracemen from Pittsburgh and Massillon were in the city on Monday, but what transpired between them and the ore brokers has not been made public. The outlook, however, has a more cheerful appearance than two weeks ago. Everything apparently depends on the action of the workingmen in Pitts-burgh. If a compromise be effected business will be more brisk, and until the difficulty adjusted no large, extensive sales of ore will

And inasmuch as the difficulty at Pitts-burgh has been settled and those at other points are in a way of solution, we may hope for a fairly prosperous season.

SEVERAL of the pictorial features of the June Century are of uncommon interest, like the frontispiece portrait of Tennyson after Woolner's bust, and the other full-page pictures in the profusely illustrated paper by Edmund W. Gosse on "Living English Sculptors;" also Severn's sketch of Keats in his last illness, accompanied by a sonnet by Miss Edith M. Thomas, and a portrait of the artist-friend Severn. Of descriptive intest, beside, are the sixteen or seventeen cuts which reinforce H. H.'s concluding paper in her history of the ruin of the Franciscan Missions in California and the illustrations with George W. Cable's account of the commercial growth of New Orleans since 1814, under the title, "The Great South Gate." Most readers will probably turn wi'h a lively interest to the three or four papers by authorative writers, on subjects which now lead in the current of public discussion. What Professor Bryce has to say about the relations of "England and Ireland," is of first importance, both from his point of view as a Liberal commoner and as a student of political history. He sets Irish idiosyncra-cies over against English pride and stubbornness, and weighs the past causes and the future outlook of the Anglo-Irish situation with admirable fairness and attractive fullness of knowledge. He makes the Irish question comprehensible, which is saying a great deal, and is discreetly silent as to what the policy of England ought to be. Henry James, Jr., in a critical essay on the "Correspondence of Carlyle and 'Emerson," evolves out of their letters two well rounded and charmingly characterized philosophers. And another article which also shows that literary subjects will not be neglected in the Century, though it has given up set reviews of books, is the first of two papers by James Herbert Morse on "The Native Element in American Fiction." A this time when the methods of our modern novelists are being called in question, this dis-cussion of the faults and merits of early American story writers has a special value. Albert Stickney's attack upon the jury system, in last November's Century, meets here with contra-vention in several letters grouped with a brief rejoinder by Mr. Stickney, under the title, "Both Sides of the Jury Question." Mr. Howells, in the sixth part of "A Woman's Reason," assists the hero and heroine to make up their quarrel, and introduces a shipwreck perhaps to show that "moving accidents by flood and field" are not incompatible with his views of novel writing. A racy story, by Professor Beers of Yale, called "Split Zephr," contrasts the aims of a party of students on leaving college with their views and condi-tions lifteen years later. But most notable for tions fifteen years later. But most notable, for novelty and fiever of the soil is the concludnovelty and flevor of the soil is the concluding part of Joel Chandler Harris's story-sketch, "At Teague Poteet's." Poems are contributed to the number by John Vance Cheney, Edith M. Thomas, Frances Hodgson Burnett, H. C. Bunner, and Caroline A. Mason. Among the "Bric-a-Brac" poems are some verses entitled "Look at Browning," in allusion to the freshness of his last volume "Jocoseria," and Joseph Kirkland's humorous solution of the riddle in Mr. Stockton's story, "The Ladwar the There," which was printed "The Lady or the Tiger," which was printed in the November Century, "Topics of the Time" discusses "The Present Aspect of the Irish Question," "The Outlook for Statesmen

The Specter Of The Tulleries

There is no record to show when the Red Specter first took up his lodgings at the Tuilerries, but it is affirmed that he disclosed his existance there most unmistalcably during the great revolutionary period. A few days before the terrible 10th of August, 1793—so the story goes—Marie Antoinette's women were sitting in the Salle des Gades, when they became suddenly aware of the presence of a small man clothed from crown to heel in coatlet who looked at them with such unscarlet, who looked at them with such un-earthly eyes that they were frozen with terror. They rushed to the apartment of Mme. La Dauphin, and related their adventure. The Dauphin, and related their adventure. The next apparition of the red man was in 1814, in the presence of the little king of Rome and attendantor and the red figure was again seen, according to report, a little before the death of Louis XVIII,—this time in the Galcrie du Louvre. In 1815, however, much discredit was thrown upon the ghost's existence by the practical joking of some art students attached to the Gross' studio at the Louvre. vre. Some of the Louvre apartments had been placed at the disposal of ruined emi-grants who had returned to France and found grants who had returned to France and found a protectress in the Duchesse d'Angouleme. Among these were two old maiden ladies and a knight of St. Louis, who were dining together one evening, when to their supreme astonishment a grand diable rouge came down the chimney, and snatching a leg of mutton from the table, disappeared with it by the way he came. The incident was related to the Duchess, who sought the presence of the king, and with tears pouring down her face, declared her conviction that some great misfortune was impending. The king laughed at his niece's fears, and sent for a chimney at his niece's fears, and sent for a chimney sweeper. A boy who went up the chimney to look for the diable rough did not return. A man was then sent up, but nothing more was seen of him. The greatest excitement reigned in the palace, and at length a fireman undertook to explore the haunted chimney. He returned and explained the mystery. It appeared that the chimney passed by Gros' studio, and that his pupils, by making a hole in the wall, were chabled to play these pranks upon Illustrious personages. They had made the two sweeps their confederates, but the fireman was not to be bribed. federates, but the fireman was not to be bribed. AT THIS time, when showers are making themselves numerous, it might be well to un-derstand "umbrella flirtations." To leave your umbrella in the hallemeans "I don't want it any more." To purchase an umbrella in-dicates "I am not smart, but honest." To trail your umbrella on the sidewalk means that the man behind you thirsts for your blood. To lend your umbrella indicates "I am a fool." To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a nice silk one means "Exchange is no robbery." To urge a friend to take an umbrella, saying, "Oh! do take it: I'd much rather you would than not," signifies that you are lying. To return an umbrella means—never mind what it means. Marvelous Cure of Stone in the Bladder-Large

Marvelous Cure of Stone in the Bladder—Large Stones Removed by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy."
From the Pittafeld, (Mass.) Eagle.
Stone in the Bladder is a very dangerous aliment; but many most remarkable cures have of late been wrought by "Kennedy's Favorite Remedy"—the invention of Dr. Kennedy of Rondout, N. Y. Another striking case is now added to the list. Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., states in a letter to Dr. Kennedy that he had been troubled with bladder complaint for 14 years, and had consulted at different times seven physicians; but nothing beyond temporary allayment of the pain had been worked. Towards the end of last January Mr. Lawler called on Br. Kennedy. Sounding the doctor "struck stone." He decided that Mr. Lawler should first try the "Favorite Remedy," so as, if possible, to avoid an operation. And here is the remarkable result; "Dear Doctor Kennedy—The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. If you would like to see the stones I will send them to you." This letter bears date "Dalton, Mass., Feb, 6th," and is signed. "Peter Lawler." The stones, which are so large us to warrant for "Kennedy's Pavorite Remedy" the claim that it is the most successful specific for Stone yet discovered are now in Dr. Kennedy's possession, Incidentally Mr. Lawler also states that the "Favorite Remedy" at the name time canted him of a stubborn case of Rheumatism; and it is 4 fact that is all affections arising out of disorder of the liver or urinary organs it is a searching remedy and works marvelous benefits. It is itsulf almost a medicine chest. Order It of your druggist. Price $r.co. a houte.

—We hear that the Enamett mining company has withdrawn the pitifully small offers made to the widows of the men who were killed at Keel Ridge, and declares itself absolved from all claims on their part. The company "thundered in the prelade"—it would recover the bodies of the men, no matter at what cost; it would pay the widows and orphans liberally; it would erect a monument to the memory of the dead. It has done nothing. The men lie where they fell, there is no monument, and the bereaved women must go to court for resiress. Some of them will do so but most are debarred by their poverty, and the company, no houbt, takes that fact into
