Don's Review of Sept. 29 said of the week: "Retail trade, the last step in the movement from producer to consumer, is at the same time the first step upon which depend empty shelves in the stores and future orders to the mills. After months of unnatural economy, buying should be large enough to send the mills further orders very soon. Special inquiry has been made this week at all commercial centres regarding the state of retail trade, and many of the answers are given in the following pages. Wide diversity appears in different trades, and the details of business at the different cities merit general attention. The main facts disclosed are, first, a marked improvement within the past month, and a considerable excess over the business done a year ago, particularly in the necessities of life. But second, it appears that the volume of trade at present is on the whole considerably less than in a normal year, at most points, and in the more important trades is apparently about 20 per cent. smaller than in September, 1892. Evidence of continued improvement in wholesale trade and manufacture does not appear this week. There is large distribution on orders given some time ago, but new business going to the manufacturers is everywhere slackening. The completion of orders for replenishment of stocks leaves a narrower demand, and it is yet too early for consumption to provide further orders. The volume of business reported by clearings at the chief cities is 6.9 per cent. larger than last year, but 21.8 percent. less than in 1892, and for the month of September the daily average has been 134 millions, against 129 millions last year before recovery from the panic had come, and 177 millions in 1892. As these include payments resulting from trade deferred during months of uncertainty, the comparison is but moderately encouraging."

speeches to English audiences: "Mr. Wilson even despairs of free government, for he said we are being rapidly sobered, though unappalled, by the truth forced upon us that of all human governments a free government is the most complex and difficult and, judging from the world's experience, the most uncertain and short-lived. I beg to assure Mr. Wilson, of West Virginia, that the government of the United States, resting as it does upon the will of a free people, is safe and secure—quite as secure as the governments that are conducted by the titled few, and that a free people like ours, capable of governing themselves and having so demonstrated for more than 100 years, will be alert enough to see to it that no industrial policy shall long continue in this country that will lower the conditions of its people to the level of their European rivals and rob them of their dignity and independence."
The cost of electricity is all that prevents its immediate utilization in nearly every situation where heat and light are wanted. Undoubtedly early in the twentieth century even farmers' wives will do their cooking by electricity. The wear and tear of life that will be saved in that day is incalculable. Electricians ought to work with all their might and enthusiasm to produce electricity cheaply. Then the marvels related in Bulwer's "Coming Race" will be every day events in all families. Electrical kitchens are making their way slowly. A wealthy man in Brooklyn has his house fitted with one. There is in New York city an electrical dining club, where food is cooked in the new way. It is necessary to have the utensils specially made. A contrivance is attached whereby they can be hooked to the wires. Then the button is pressed. The cook learns just what temperature she wants for boiling, broiling, roasting or baking. That temperature is secured by the strength of the current, which may be regulated by a key. The temperature is shown by a thermometer. Then, knowing just how long it will take to cook a given dish, no more watching is required. The cook may go off and play the piano till the time is up.
Is it not time to change the old cry for free raw materials that the United States "may take the markets of the world," to the more truthful one, "give us free trade wages and we will take the markets of the world?" The drawback under the McKinley act, of 99 per cent. of the duty on all imported material entering into articles that were exported after their manufacture in the United States, fully complied with the persistent demand for free raw material. It is not the tariff on raw material that has been a hamper upon the home manufacturer; it is the labor tariff that he has been paying, the large margin over and above the labor basis abroad. The figures have been cited over and over again showing what a large percentage of the cost of every iron and steel product is labor. His labor cost sheet is the home manufacturer's barrier against foreign markets—Iron Trade Review.
Mr. Wilson, the "tariff reformer," is made much of in England—as is but natural, he having worked altogether in England's interest—and he repays their courtesies by telling them that the government of the United States is "short-lived." That after-dinner speech will go far to cost Mr. Wilson his seat in congress. It ought to, at any rate.

The Brazilian trade, which was rapidly coming this way under the reciprocity act, will now go to England. Our exports to Brazil during one year of the McKinley law, increased nearly $10,000,000. Brazil now retaliates and restores her duties on American products which she admitted free under the reciprocity act, which in return admitted free to our markets her sugar, coffee and hides, the sugar and coffee especially being articles that we must buy abroad anyway. Exports of American products to Brazil will fall off very largely, and yet we must buy just as much foreign sugar and coffee as usual. This is what "tariff reform" does.—Detroit Journal.
The resignation of Rush Culver from the land office with such a dramatic flourish, and the subsequent announcement of his candidacy for congress constitute a movement intended to counteract the political effect of Hoke Smith's decision in the homestead country. We do not know just how long this homestead racket can be worked by politicians, but it would seem as though, as a paying lode, it is pretty lean now. Possibly Rush considers it his special mission to reform the democratic party, if so he has undertaken a greater job than ever did the first Napoleon.—L'Anse Sentinal.
If any republican writer or speaker refers to the war of the rebellion he is at once howled at by the democrats—he is "waving the bloody shirt"—but the chairman of the house committee on appropriations—Sayers, of Texas—stumping his district for re-election can use language like the following without rebuke: "We have taken $11,000,000 away from the pensioners and, when congress meets in December next, we will take $10,000,000 more off those fellows who came down here and murdered our people." No "bloody shirt" about that, eh?
In spite of the hurrah which went up when John Strogg was chosen to succeed Dan Campan as the head of the democratic party organization, Don M. has downed the opposition to him and his reform system and is again in full control of the democratic machine. No wonder, either; he has more brains than the lot of them.
One Drummond seeks a little cheap notoriety by the arrest of Henry W. Howgate, whom the authorities could have had at any time during the last dozen years had they really wanted him. It is a three-to-one bet that he will never be brought to trial, and the odds against his conviction if tried are larger yet.
At a convention held at Toronto, last week, among other plans for the enlargement of the commerce of the lakes, was one for raising the level of the water in lake Erie by obstructing the outflow via the Niagara river. It appears that the plan is entirely practicable and that its cost would not be excessive.
