

FAMINE EXISTS ON IRISH COAST

First Refugees from Famine Stricken District Arrive Here.

BY GENE COHN
NEA Service Writer.

New York.—"Ay, and it's a bad country. It's the good saints only that know what will be coming of the old folks, what with no peat for the fire and no potatoes for the table, and what with the children sleeping in the hay to keep warm and no milk from the cattle and the children crying for their food.

"It's a good day in Connemara when they are having more than one meal, and that bread. And no money to leave and no money to stay, and some too weak to walk, and where would they be a-walking to?"

"And all along the seashore little cabins, ten by eight, with ten or a dozen people living in every one; three or four families to every few acres of rocky land, and no crops and no turf and the flu spreading. Ay, it's a bad country."

Thus, with dramatic simplicity the first refugees to America draw the picture of Ireland's west coast famine zone. The Cunard liner Coronica has just brought them to America.

A spare and wiry young man is acting as their spokesman—Joseph Coyne, from Chliden in the most westerly hill country of Connemara. It is there and in the flood-like Belmullet country to the north that the suffering is greatest though through most of Galway and much of Donegal the people fear death and sickness even worse than in the black year of 1847.

But youth is quick to forget. Already the background of misery and suffering was giving way to a foreground of adventure and conquest in the new land. "Puppy loves," born in transit, were to be noted in sly winks and the slip of an arm around a waist.

Romance was riding even as the lean-faced spokesman talked of the somber rocky country of the Connemara coast, where the long rains have ruined the potato crops and there is no turf for the fire. Only flour to make buns and bread. And the coal which the Free State government is rushing will be of little avail for there is no place for burning it.

Two girls from Galway, pink-cheeked and excited over the adventure of entering a new country, shyly add details to the story. They are the sisters Craven—Delia and Sarah.

Soon they hope to be making money and rushing it back to the old folks that they may escape before it is too late.

More boys and girls made up this first refugee party. Only youth can flee the dread zones now, they say.

"All the young folks be leaving fast as they can," says Miss Delia Craven. "It is hard to get the old folks away, even when hunger and sickness comes. All who can are fleeing. They are going everywhere: to South Ireland where times are better, to Dublin, to England and as many as can to America."

As they tell their story groups of immigrants from half the counties of Ireland stand about the deck. Such are the conditions of life in Ireland that some are learning for the first time of the shadow of terror hanging over their fellow countrymen in the west, though tales had been passed about during the ten-day trip from the old country.

"Ay, it's bad enough when things are good," concludes Coyne, "and then it's a grind for turf and potatoes; a fight for mere existence. There's little patches of land for planting and some cattle to graze in the hills. Now the cattle die and the old folks will go next and the babies will go first. Ay, it's a bad country."

Milk of Coconuts Fine for Babies

Honolulu—Investigation of the properties of the pulp of young coconuts has developed that they contain all the constituents of human mother's milk, and perhaps may be used in the tropics to take the place of mother's milk, according to statements made before the Pan-Pacific Science Council here by Dr. N. P. Larsen, of the Queen's hospital, Honolulu.

It developed during the meeting that several Hawaiians present had been weaned on coconut pulp, but it is believed that the announcement by Dr. Larsen is the first to be made of the actual chemical properties of the pulp and milk of coconuts.

Matinee To Be On Tuesday Mar. 17th

On account of the unprecedented and large sale of tickets and the assurance of an attendance beyond the capacity of the theatre for the evening performance of that charming Irish drama, "Kathleen Mavourneen" at the Delft theatre St. Patrick's Day, next Tuesday, March 17th, a special price of fifty cents to all parts of the house for young and old, children and adults, is provided for the matinee which will be given in the afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and it is hoped that all who can possibly do so will attend the matinee in the afternoon, thereby allowing the room for the evening performance. Those who now hold dollar tickets and wish to attend the matinee, may have them exchanged for the fifty cent ticket at the box office when they present themselves for the performance if they wish.

NINE LYCEUM SHOWS BOOKED

Private Peat, Branch Rickey and Other Notables coming Next Season.

Nine entertainments will be offered on next season's lyceum course by the Escanaba Community Educational Bureau. There will, however, be no advance in the price of season tickets. Included in the list of attractions will be "Private Harold Peat"; Branch Rickey, manager of the St. Louis National League baseball club, and other men and women of national prominence in various fields of activity.

Dates of the various entertainments and lectures have not been announced, nor has the bureau completed its plans for the annual season ticket sale. Probably this latter portion of the work will not be taken up until next fall.

Attractions contracted for include:

Solis Marine Band—A musical organization from Central America which has had exceptional success in lyceum.

Edna Means—Probably the best known dramatic reader in lyceum.

Goat—Naturalist and "bird man" whose lecture features imitations of the songs of American feathered creatures.

Branch Rickey—Manager of the St. Louis Cardinals, whose winters are being spent in the promotion of good sportsmanship.

Adams Quartet—One of the veteran organizations of lyceum, and an attraction the bureau here repeatedly has attempted to secure.

Private Harold Peat—A war hero whose lecture pleads that the young people of today be told the real, unvarnished truth about war.

Parnell—An entertainer who features his own "one-man band."

Charles Cox & Company—Mr. Cox formerly was the reader and entertained with the National Male quartette. He and his associates in the new company are offering a decided lyceum novelty.

Colonial Quintet—A novelty musical offering.

Krassick Formally Held for Trial in Circuit Court

Tom Krassick, of North Escanaba, was held by Judge McEwen yesterday to await trial in circuit court on a charge of assault with intent to kill. The bond was fixed at $2,000.

Krassick was arrested several weeks ago, after he had wounded Gustav Almonroder, a 16-year-old boy, with a high-power rifle. The preliminary examination was postponed until Almonroder was able to testify.

The youth is now out of the hospital, although his injured leg still gives him considerable trouble.

Latin American Pianists Please German Hearers

Berlin.—Latin America is well represented among the foreign artists who have joined the Berlin musical colony and are giving concerts in the German capital this winter. Miss Anzelica Morales, a Mexican girl of 13, made her professional debut here recently as a pianist and attracted favorable attention. She has studied music in Germany for several years and has long been looked upon as a child wonder.

Miss Rosita Renard, the charming young Chilean pianist, who has been heard in Berlin frequently, will also give a recital within a few weeks and expects to go to the United States next spring for a concert tour. After her North American tour she will make a tour through South America before returning to Europe.

OREGON SCHOOL AMENDMENT UP TO HIGH COURT

Final Decision of Anti-Parochial Law Soon to Be Pronounced.

BY DAVID LAWRENCE
 (Copyright 1924, by the Escanaba Press.)
 Washington, Mar. 10.—Does the child belong to the state or to the parent? Shall parochial schools and private schools including girl schools and military schools be subject to abolition by the states of the Union?
 These are the issues before the supreme court of the United States after two years of wrangling in the lower courts. Argument is being heard this week on two separate cases, one brought by the Catholics and other religious bodies who believe they shall have their right under the constitution to teach religion along with the regular curriculum prescribed by a state and one brought by protestant and non-sectarian groups including the Association of Military Schools and Colleges of the United States, Association of Principals of Girls Schools, Association of Private Schools of Central States, Association of California.
 Started in Oregon
 The two cases have been consolidated for argument because the issue is more or less related. The whole thing grows out of a law adopted in a way of Ku Klux Klanism in Oregon in November 1922. The federal court declared the law unconstitutional and the state of Oregon has appealed to the supreme court here to settle the issue once for all. The law wouldn't have taken effect anyhow till September 1926 but the private schools claim they already have lost business. They waived claims to damages.

 Specifically the Oregon law would require all children between the ages of eight and sixteen to attend public schools unless physically unable or taught in the home by parent or guardian but even so the latter must take examinations showing they are competent teachers and their children are required to attend public schools if the parents are not. Another exception was made in the case of children living at too great a distance from a public school but if the state furnished transportation the youngsters to be required to attend public schools.
 Private Schools Fight
 In short, Oregon took it upon itself to say which schools its children should attend, arguing that state has absolute power to regulate education. The military schools do not have their contention on religious grounds but on another article of the federal constitution which does not permit private property to be taken without due process of law. The complainants say that saloons and other businesses which can be proved to be a public evil can be stopped but that businesses which cannot be proved harmful and are obviously helpful should not be ruined. The state of Oregon contends that the private schools would not be abolished but simply deprived of students between the ages of eight and sixteen but the private schools answer that they would be losing business they now have so the principle remains the same and if it is once conceded that the state can make the age limits eight to sixteen, the state could at any time make the ages from six to twenty three if it chose.

 The religious groups fighting the law base their argument on the ground that the constitution guarantees freedom of religious worship and that to interfere with a Catholic, Episcopalian or a Lutheran or anyone who attends a private school in which the parents wish religion taught is to violate the constitution.
 May Have Wide Effect
 According to the counsel for the private schools, the census for 1924 shows that there were 23,777,795 school children in the United States while the Bureau of Education of the department of the interior of the United States shows an enrollment in all private schools of 181,153. Of this number 139,019 were in private schools conducted by religious denominations.
 "What effect on religious prejudice," says Joseph A. Hill, principal of the Hill Military Academy of Portland, Oregon, "can one hundred and thirty thousand have on twenty three million? In Oregon but three and four tenths percent of the children of the state at present are in private schools. The reports in Oregon do not segregate these schools in Oregon according to religious denominations but if the private schools of Oregon were denominational schools, teaching one particular religious belief, the percentage is too insignificant to have any effect on the whole." This is made in answer to the contention of the other side that private schools foster religious prejudice and that one hundred percent Americanism is obtainable only in the public schools.
 Can Instruction Be Limited?
 John C. Veitch, attorney for the private schools sums up the issue from his view with this statement in his brief:
 "The police power may be used to correct an existing evil and there may be cases where it might be used to prevent an evil that is certain to come but we know of no cases upholding the use of the police power to prevent a purely theoretical and speculative injury. We can only judge the future by the past and the history of the private schools show no such tendency as is predicted." While the state has the power to require that all its citizens shall receive instruction in certain things, we do not believe that the state has the power to say that education shall not go beyond the instruction it offers. Individual freedom to pursue any educational course that may seem best cannot be denied, and the state has no power to control this choice beyond placing minimum requirements. Parents are at liberty to say that their children shall receive instruction in addition to the instruction required by the state and it matters not whether that instruction is in religious matters, military tactics, physical training or anything else so long as it does not interfere with the rights of others.

 So there is no denying the application of the highest standards of education in private schools but there is a denial that the state can prohibit other instruction too and by schools of the parents' own choosing.
 Sponsors Ambitious
 It was as planned, according to Mr. Hill, by the people back of the Oregon law to get this type of measure passed by other states of the Union and ultimately to try to make it an amendment to the federal constitution.
 Former Senator Chamberlain of Oregon has been employed by the state to defend the law and he has presented a comprehensive brief based largely on the broad doctrine that the power to regulate education is lodged in the states and that they can make suitable regulations in accordance as the people or the legislature think to be in conformity with good citizenship and the public interest.

Woman's Club to Hold Sale For Near East Relief
 Members of the Escanaba Woman's club are making plans for the sale of Armenian goods which will be held under the auspices of the local club at the First Presbyterian church parlors Saturday afternoon April 11th. The ladies have received a large assortment of articles made in the far off country of Armenia consisting of handkerchiefs, dollies, runners, center pieces and other useful articles which will be sold for the benefit of the Near East Relief.
 The articles will make suitable Easter gifts and any one planning on offering a gift at that season would do well to wait and see this beautiful assortment before making any purchase as the articles are without comparison with anything made in this country and the proceeds of the sale are for a worthy cause.
Liquor Destroyed By State Police
 About 25 gallons of liquor, in containers ranging from half-pint bottles to five-gallon gasoline cans, went into the sewer at police headquarters yesterday. The liquor had been accumulated as evidence in a number of cases which had been disposed of in circuit court. Members of the state police officiated at the "pooring" ceremonies.

DANCE TICKETS NOT ACCEPTED IN INCOME TAX

Expenditure Not Necessary the Experts Say.
 The cost of tickets to entertainments held by various organizations, purchased at the solicitation of one's customers, is not deductible for income tax purposes, under a ruling that has just been announced by the Income Tax Department, according to M. L. Seidman, tax expert of Seidman & Seidman, certified public accountants.
 The ruling came up, Mr. Seidman explained, in a case where a corporation engaged in a retail business stated that it was frequently solicited by its customers to buy tickets to entertainments, the proceeds of which were to be applied to the support of some worthy organization. In order to retain the patronage of its customers, tickets were bought from them, and the corporation contended that the expenditures were deductible as an advertising expense.
 The income tax department held that such expenditure was not an ordinary and necessary expense incurred in the current business of the corporation, even though it may have been beneficial or even necessary in a broader sense. It was therefore concluded that the expenditure was not deductible.
 "This ruling will affect many taxpayers engaged in business," Mr. Seidman remarked, "as the purchase of tickets under such circumstances is a most common occurrence."

For the beaux and belles of old Tennessee

"It was the gathering place of all the distinguished men and women of the South"—this is how one elderly statesman, former governor of Tennessee, describes the old Maxwell House of Nashville. There the beaux and belles of old Dixie dined and danced. Throughout the whole South the Maxwell House was celebrated for its delicious food—and above all for its coffee. The fame of this coffee, a special blend wonderfully rich and mellow, spread gradually to all parts of the country. Today, this same coffee, blended and roasted in just the same way, is supplied in sealed tins to all who most enjoy good living. Your own family can have the rare flavor and aroma that delighted the old South long ago. Ask your grocer today for one of the blue tins of Maxwell House Coffee.

Boston Store Co. Elect Officers

Gratifying in its results was the meeting of the stockholders of the Boston Store Company held at the store Tuesday afternoon.
 Reports of the year's business were submitted and approved by all members, everyone expressing their satisfaction regarding the condition of business affairs of the company.
 The following were appointed as members of the board of directors: Mr. Perron, A. J. Moreau, George McGuire, Jos. J. Perrow, W. J. Roberge and Paul Wickert of this city and J. P. Carlson of Kipling.
 The new officers elected are: President, Mr. Perron; vice president, J. P. Carlson; second vice president, George McGuire; secretary, Paul Wickert, and treasurer, A. J. Moreau.
 The very interesting meeting was concluded by a smoker.

Four Plead Guilty to Violation of New Dry Ordinance

Four men, all saloon operators or employees, entered pleas of guilty yesterday to charges of violating the new Escanaba prohibition ordinance, and paid fines of $100 each, plus the costs. The arrests were made after police, during sanitary inspection visits, had also served whisky in the establishments.
 The men were John Champagne, 1827 Third Ave. North, and Alex. Shadockki, his bartender; Peter Wonski, 1805 Third Ave. North, and Louis Wallin, 1891 Third Ave. North.
 John Duganals and Joseph Bouchard, arrested Monday night in raids by sheriff and police officers, on charges of manufacturing and selling intoxicating liquors, were bound over to await trial in circuit court. Bonds were fixed at $500. $200's were found on the property of both men.

600,000 Women Have Stopped Falling Hair This New Way

Here's what one enthusiastic writes:
 Baltimore, Md., December 2, 1924
 After using three bottles of Van Es Scalp Treatment, I have found its results marvelous. I am 75 years old and, after forty years, my hair is free of dandruff. My hair has ceased to fall out and is soft, glossy and full of life, and bald spots of many years are covered with a growth of fine, new hair.
 I consider Van Es Scalp treatment just as essential in keeping the hair clean and healthy as a toothbrush is essential in keeping the teeth clean and healthy, therefore, it should accompany regularly the toothbrush in its daily use.
 Yours truly,
