DO YOUR XMAS SHOPPING EARLY

Christmas comes every year and almost everyone wants to remember their friends in some way. The usual way is by making or buying gifts.

Early in the Christmas season we should make plans on what to get and give to our friends. The shopping expedition should be early in the season because there are more things to choose from and better articles. There is a greater assortment of goods and clerks, both. There is time to make your choice and then exchange it in case of a better one.

Then it should be early in the day because everyone, both clerks and purchasers, are in better humor and have more patience in selecting.

Another reason why we should do our shopping early is that you can't choose well at the last minute. You are tired and the clerks are tired, you either ask the clerk in a vague or angry voice and the clerk in an equally dazed manner shows you the article or the wrong one, whereupon you make the wrong purchase and everyone feels worse than ever about it including the receiver who doesn't see the Christmas cheer when a tired out friend is the giver.

If everyone would do to the other as they wish to be done to them; this old world would roll around easier at Christmas time.

Frances Defnet.

Introduction: The subject which there has been considerable comment upon, is why it is so essential that we should do our Christmas shopping early. We consider the holidays, the most important time of the year and we desire to get our friends something for Christmas. In the following paragraphs I will try and tell you why early shopping is important.

Cheapness: The articles put out for the Christmas shoppers this time of the year are considerably cheaper than later in the month. As time draws near article begin to rise in price and it makes it harder for persons who cannot afford to pay so much.

Rush: In the earlier part of the season, there is not such a rush as later and persons are at liberty to take time in picking articles for Christmas use. Later in the season there is always a jam and people therefore try to be greedy and take advantage of the closing season.

Packages to be sent away: Christmas presents that are to be sent away and if they are purchased early can be sent away early because there are so many hundreds of packages to be mailed, and also sent away by express, that it keeps clerks and mail-carriers back, and they therefore have to work overtime, or over hours.

Conclusion: In conclusion I think I have given my just reasons for saying why people should do their Christmas shopping early.

Gladys Pulley.

There are various reasons why Christmas shopping should not be neglected until the last moment. The narration below illustrates a few points in that line.

A woman entered a large department store on Christmas evening intending to purchase all her gifts. She rushed to a clerk and asked rather harshly: "Will you wait on me, miss?" "I'm busy at present and there are five or six people waiting for me," she answered with an artificial smile.

The woman, fretting and scolding, waited for her turn, which occurred an hour later. The clerk came to her: "What was it you wish for?"

"First I want a circus clown." "Those were sold out two weeks ago," she responded, trying to be pleasant.

"Oh dear! Well, then I'll take two quarter handkerchiefs," the woman uttered, growing impatient.

"The cheapest we have now are forty cents."

"Will I get discount on this doll? The head's all bumped and scratched." "No! the clerk answered, we never give discount during the Christmas holidays."

"I was informed that the biggest bargains were offered on the last day's previous to Xmas,—that's why I waited."

Presently the closing bell rang and the doors were closed. The woman went home exhausted and unhappy, the clerk even more so. Christmas as being merry was not recognized by either. What was the cause?

A month ago there was no rush the firm would have ordered what was lacking, the woman would have received the best of goods cheaply, and the stock being new, consequently the goods would be in very good condition.

Ruth Starrine.

As the holiday season approaches everyone has more or less shopping to do but most people do not realize the value of shopping early.

There are many reasons for carrying out this plan. First of all people have better satisfaction at having the first pick and with so many varieties they have a better chance of finding out what they want.

Whereas late shoppers have many disappointments when looking over things they planned on getting for nearly every article displays the handling of hundreds of people, and in the course of time they find themselves looking over at articles which they never thought of getting.

Late shoppers are not welcomed as cordially by clerks, as early shoppers are, for when the store is crowded, they have not very much time to spend on one person, and thereby you must take the first thing that comes to you.

By these things we learn the great advantages in early shoppers. They have more articles to decide from and thereby they are better satisfied.

Anna Ford.

There are many reasons why we should do our Christmas shopping early; some are, we have a larger stock to select from. If we have something to be made, we must buy the material early enough, if there there doesn't happen to be what you want in the store you will have time to order it; by doing our Christmas shopping early, we avoid the rush. Below is an example of a woman entering a store and they have sold all the articles, like the one she wanted to purchase.

"Will you please wait upon me? I (Continued on page four.)

Beyond All Doubt, He Had Been Murdered.

Yond dispute, Sypher was dead. "Poor divvie!" muttered the Irishman. . . . "The Pool of Flame!"

CHAPTER XXXII.

For several minutes O'Rourke remained beside the body, making two notable discoveries. For he was quick to note the fact that one of the dead man's hands was tightly clenched, while the other lay half-open and limp. The former was closed upon a leather thong so stout as to resist any attempt to break it by main strength, so firmly held that the murderer had found it necessary to sever it with a knife. The knife itself was there, for proof of this; the sheen of light upon its mother-of-pearl handle caught the Irishman's eye.

Picking it up, he subjected it to a close examination that, however, gleaned no information. It was little more than a small pocket penknife, little worn, with blades of German steel. It carried no identifying marks and told him, but one thing—that the assassin had been a European; a native would never have bothered with so ineffectual a thing when a sturdy weapon, serviceable alike for offense and defense, would have served its purpose equally well.

From this he turned to the dagger which he had taken from the body; a stiletto with a plain ebony handle, unmarked, unscratched, apparently fresh from the dealer's showcase. It meant nothing, save that it indicated still more strongly that the murderer was most probably not a native. A Greek or an Italian, a Genoese sailor or a native of Southern France—say a seafaring man out of Marseilles—might have carried it.

"Oho!" said O'Rourke, speculative. "A Frenchman, mayhap!"

He got up, satisfied that he would learn nothing more by continuing his search of the solicitor's body. The mental link between the fact of the crime and its perpetrator was inevitable; O'Rourke believed implicitly that Sypher had been murdered by Des Trebes masquerading as "De Hyeres." And he could have done himself an injury in the impotent fury aroused by realization that he had permitted himself to be so childishly hoodwinked, despite the suspicions he had entertained of the so-called "De Hyeres." He felt himself responsible, since he had neglected to warn Sypher. It had been on his tongue's tip that afternoon, when Sypher himself had diverted the warning by his request that the O'Rourke could more comfortably spin his yarn after they had dined.

"Poor divvie!" said the adventurer again. He stooped to spread his handkerchief over the staring, pitiful face. "And poor, poor young woman!"

He was startled by the thought of her; for the first time it entered into his comprehension, until then bounded by the hard and fast fact of the murder. Now instantly his concern about the crime was resolved into solicitude for the girl. What could have happened to her? What had become of the servants, whose sudden desertion had left the house so sinisterly quiet? Swept on by a fervor of anxiety on the girl's behalf, O'Rourke glanced quickly about the study to assure himself that he had overlooked nothing of importance, then passed out into the main hall or reception-room. Here the most searching inspection revealed nothing amiss. He moved on to the other room on the main floor and found himself in the dining-room; here again all was in perfect order.

The kitchen offices in the rear of the house next received his attention; he found them completely untenanted, having apparently been abandoned in desperate haste. Everything was in disorder; the meal he had been invited to partake of was cooking to clinders in pots and ovens; a heavy offense of burning food thickened the atmosphere. Half-stiffed, he left the place as quickly as possible, returned to the main hall and ascended to the upper story.

Here he found three bed-chambers and a bath. He first entered Sypher's, then the room evidently occupied by Miss Pynsent, finally that was unquestionably a guest-chamber, discovering nothing noteworthy until he reached the latter. And here he received a shock. Thrown carelessly across the foot of the bed was a woman's evening wrap, while on the bureau were gloves, long, white and fresh, but wrinkled from recent wear, and a silk-veil. Plainly these were the property of the fourth guest, whose place had been set at the table below, but of whose identity he had not been apprised. Presumably, he reflected, she (whoever she was) had been intended as the fulfillment of Sypher's hinted surprise.

A guess formed vaguely in his brain, and suddenly curdled into a suspicion. He took the gloves in his hand, examining them for marks of identification, but found none. But in one corner of the veil he discovered an embroidered initial—the letter B.

"Beatrix?" he guessed huskily. "Is it possible? . . . He promised me a surprise. . . . 'Twould have been like her to plan it with him—and 'tis quite possible she reached Rangoon before I . . . My wife!"

Hastily he returned to the evening wrap, a fascinating contrivance of lace and satin unquestionably the last cry of the Parisian mode, such a wrap as his wife might well have worn. But beyond Paquin's label stitched inside its dainty pocket it boasted no distinguishing mark.

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

HOW ONE SHIP FOUGHT A WHOLE FLEET.

By A. W. MACY.

On August 31, 1591, a British fleet of six vessels lay quietly at anchor near the Azores. Suddenly, and almost without warning, a great Spanish armada of 53 ships bore down upon them. Consternation seized the admiral, and he fled precipitately with his flagship, commanding the others to follow. They did so—all but one, the Revenge. Aboard that was grim Richard Grenville, the vice-admiral. He scorned to flee, and when the Spaniards called upon him to surrender he contemptuously refused. He had but 140 men fit for fighting, but he told the Spaniards he was going to cut through their line. Glaring round upon his crew, who feared him more than they did any enemy, he ordered them to attack the Spanish ships. For fifteen hours the battle raged. Grenville alternately cheering, storming, praying and devoting the Spaniards to perdition. He yielded only when less than twenty of his men could stand up to fight and he himself was mortally wounded. When it was all over the Spaniards figured out their losses thus: Two ships sunk, fifteen more or less damaged, more than 1,000 men killed and wounded, and by one little English ship.

The Pool of Flame

Having waited a few moments without event, the Irishman knocked a second time, and would have knocked a third when he thought better of it and glanced at his watch. It was only a matter of ten minutes after eight; strictly interpreting the intent of Sypher's invitation, he was a trifle early. Presumably the servants were all out of earshot, preoccupied with preparations for the meal; while Sypher and his niece were most probably still dressing.

With an impatient air O'Rourke turned back to the veranda. A hammock in one corner was swinging idly in the breeze. A number of wicker armchairs stood about, invitingly furnished with cushions. O'Rourke selected one and disposed himself to wait.

After five minutes he frowned thoughtfully and lit a cigarette. "Faith, 'tis a fine surprise he's given me," he said, irresolute. "But it can't be premeditated insult. Why should it be? And they can't all be out. 'Tis sorry I am I let that driver go; more than likely this will be the wrong house entirely. That must be the trouble. I'll just go, quietly fold up me tent and decamp before the inhabitants, if any there be, discover me and run me off the premises."

But at the head of the steps, with foot poised to descend, something restrained him; it would be difficult to say what, unless it were the unbroken, steadfast, uncanny quiet. "I'll have a look," he determined suddenly; "perhaps . . ."

He turned to the right and stopped before a long, open window, looking into what seemed to be a music room and library combined. Brilliantly illuminated by hanging lamps of unusual brilliancy, the interior was clear. And with an abrupt exclamation the adventurer entered, feeling for the revolver, to carry which had of late become habitual with him.

The room was simply furnished, if tastefully. There was a grand piano near the veranda windows with a music rack and cabinet near by. Dispersed about the floor were a few comfortable chairs, a rug of rare Oriental texture, two consoles adorned with valuable porcelains. In the middle of the room stood a draped center-table littered with books and magazines; toward the back a long, flat-topped desk.

And against the rear wall, ordinarily hidden by a folding screen of Japanese manufacture, now swept aside, was a small steel safe. Upon this O'Rourke's attention was centered. He remarked that it looked new and very strong; it was open, disclosing a variety of pigeonholes more or less occupied by docketed documents, and a smaller interior strong-box.

Between the desk and the safe a man lay prone and quite motionless. He was dressed for a ceremonious dinner, and apparently had been struck down in the act of stepping from his desk to the safe. For beyond all doubt he had been murdered. The haft of a knife protruded from his back, buried to its hilt just beneath his left shoulder-blade.

O'Rourke moved over to the body and lifted it by the shoulders, turning the face to the light. Then, with a low oath, he dropped it.

A small sound, so slight as to be all but indistinguishable, penetrated O'Rourke's stupefaction. He stood erect, looking about, telling himself that the noise resembled as much as anything the hushed cry of a child sobbing in sleep, soft and infinitely pathetic. Unable to assign its source elsewhere, he attributed it to the stricken man at his feet; and in a desperate hope that the pulse of life might still linger in Sypher's body, he withdrew the knife, turned the Week end letters may be as provided, above, up to midnight, on Saturday, for delivery at London or Liverpool on the following Tuesday morning. They may of course be filled before Saturday, but will, in no case be delivered until Tuesday morning. Both cable letters and week end letters, must be written in plain English language. Code words and words in foreign language are inadmissible.

The tariff for the cable transmission of cable letters will be $1.50, for twenty words with thirty cents added for each additional five words and for week end letters $1.50 for thirty words with twenty-five cents added for each additional five words. These tolls cover transmission, between New York or Boston, as the cable terminal on this side, and London or Liverpool as the terminal on the other side of the Atlantic.

They also include delivery at London or Liverpool and the postage, where postage is involved. Outside of London and Liverpool, all cable and week end letters will be delivered by mail unless otherwise arranged by senders. Telegraph delivery, beyond London, may be arranged by payment of a charge of one cent per word, "with minimum of 12 word including address and signature," to all points in Great Britain and Ireland, or by payment of regular word rates to other points beyond in addition to the cable letter or week end letter tolls, quoted. The tolls quoted also cover the mailing to the cable terminal at New York or Boston of cable letters or week end letters offered, at offices in other places when the senders wish them to be filed by mail. Travelers or their senders in Europe, who wish to avail themselves of these services must communicate our London office at 33 Broad Street House, New Broad street, and arrange for the filing of their communications by mail or telegraph. In accordance with established practice the address and signatures of cable letters and week end letters will be counted and charged for, except in the land line transmission on this side.

WINDOWS ARE ATTRACTIVE

a whirl and he will be in a worse quandary than before.

The merchants of Escanaba have certainly accomplished wonders in the way of window displays this year. Ludington street is just one continuous blaze of splendor from end to end. The drug stores, haberdashers, department and clothing stores and the jewelry shops present an appearance of fairyland in the gorgeousness of their windows. Starting at the upper end of town, there are a number of beautiful windows to be seen, among the west end merchants and of these, the Fair store has the most spectacular. The windows have been trimmed anew for the last week before Christmas and in the separate compartments are to be found furniture, cloaks and dresses, men's little accessories, candies and a whole window full of toys. Great taste has been shown in the arrangements and the background of green and red makes the front of this store a place of beauty and one from which many good suggestions are to be gleaned. A little further down street, one passes a series of jewelry and drug stores, each with a different and magnificent display of attractive gifts. The Big 5 and 10 has a window that will be a treat to the children, a profusion of toys, dolls and games, filling the entire front of the store. Erickson's, on the next corner has just made some wholesale changes in the display. One window here has been prepared especially for the "kids" and the average mother has a hard time dragging her young hopefuls away from it. Another compartment shows some very beautiful things in the way of lace table covers and linens, and still another contains one of the finest collections of furs ever shown in the city.

M. A. Burns, across the street, has a window fitted up with a variety of things, including cloaks, table linen and dozens of the dainty little accessories that make such a strong appeal to the fair sex. Kratze brothers have made a special effort to attract the children and to this end have filled not only the windows, but the sidewalk, with the things that make a hit with the little ones. This is probably the biggest toy display in the city. Across from this fine showing, there are three fine windows, all in a row. D. A. Oliver has a toy circus on exhibit and it is surprising to see the member of people who take an interest in it. There is a new act put on every few minutes. The Meade drug company is showing fine line of beautiful little cards, reminders and novelties in toilet sets. Hanrahans' grocery store has one of the most attractive windows in the city. A collection of fancy groceries and dozens of little delicacies to tempt any palate, are arranged in an extremely tasty manner and the remainder of the window trimmed with evergreens.

Proceeding another block down street, one passes the neat little display of Frank Atkins and comes to the Delta Hardware store. Here is an exhibit that will please everybody from the "kids" who exclaim over the skates, skis and sporting goods to the men and women of all ages who can find something to interest them in the household goods, cooking utensils, electric novelties and smokers' articles. From one end of the long street to the other, it is impossible to travel more than a few yards without meeting lavish displays and critical, indeed, must be the person who fails to find something to please them among all these beautiful things.

CURIOUS BITS OF HISTORY

A FIRE-FIGHTING INVENTOR.

By A. W. MACY.

John Lofting, a citizen of London in the latter part of the eighteenth century, had a passion for fighting fires. Though never a member of the fire department, he always responded to an alarm, and was usually one of the first to arrive on the scene. He rendered efficient service, but would accept no pay. He was a metal worker by trade, and in 1792 he invented a contrivance to protect the thumb while sewing. It was a sort of bell-shaped cup, hence it was called a thumb-bell. In the course of time this was changed into the more euphonious "thimble." The article is now worn on one of the fingers while sewing, instead of on the thumb as formerly, though sailors stick to the old custom.
