Sheriff Merringer of Escanaba Township Gives Bond for Trial—Open After Hours Saturday

T. Curran in answer to complaints from various sources was on the jump Saturday and as a result three Delta county saloon keepers must stand trial for infractions of the liquor laws of the October term of court here. Henry Merringer of Escanaba township was the first to be taken into custody. Complaints were received by the sheriff Saturday and that night he made the arrest, Merringer being charged with keeping open after hours. Yesterday afternoon automobilists formed prosecutor Strom that the moon of Emil Deroun of Ford River area was open. They maintained that there were a number of men and women drinking there and making considerable noise. Sheriff Curran and Deputy George Curran made a night trip to Ford River switch by boat. They found that a family party in progress, one keg of beer furnishing the refreshments. The saloon, however, was open and Deroun was bound before Judge McEwen this morning for his appearance at the October term of court, the charge being keeping open on Sunday. Reports to the effect that Alfonso Clair of Schaffer was keeping his saloon open sent the sheriff and his men scurrying to that village yesterday morning with the result that Clair was given a preliminary hearing this morning before Judge McEwen.

Automobile in which Mr. and Mrs. George Peterson Are Taken to Their Home Burns

On the return of Mr. and Mrs. George Peterson, who were married recently on Mountain much to the surprise of their many friends here was accompanied by an incident that was on the reception program, namely destruction of the Peterson automobile by fire.

The young people arrived home this morning from their wedding trip and were met by Mr. Peterson's brother, Mr. Peterson with the family car, Studebaker. After driving the young people to the Peterson home Mr. Peterson drove the car to the garage in the rear of the home and on the way to the house a few minutes before a smoke was seen arising from the garage and a few seconds later the car was shot forth. The automobile, which was heavily loaded with furniture, was hauled from the garage to the street where it was still burning when the fire companies arrived. The firemen divided their attention between the automobile and the garage and both blazes were soon quenched.

The top was burned from the automobile badly scorched and the tires were run, however, under power to the Edward's garage for repairs. The garage was almost completely destroyed.

POWERS BACK UNITED STATES

FRANCE WIRES MINISTER TO STAND BY POLICY OF U. S. AS REGARDS MEXICAN SITUATION

PRESIDENT TO MEET COMMITTEES

Wilson Announces He Will Read Message Tomorrow Unless Huerta Changes Attitude

(By Associated Press.)
Washington, D. C., August 25.—President Wilson has announced that unless the attitude of the Huerta government suddenly changes he will personally read his message to Congress tomorrow outlining the policy of the administration. He will discuss the message tonight with the members of the senate and house committees on foreign affairs.

The message is couched in kind terms because it is believed the world should know that the Mexican situation is abnormal. Foreign powers are trying to press Huerta into yielding to the demands of the United States.

Paris.—The French foreign office has instructed the French minister at Mexico to support the policy of the United States toward Mexico. The indications are that President Poincaré will not receive F. De La Barra, the Mexican minister to France even though Huerta has been recognized as the provisional president. The question, however, is not definitely settled.

FINE CRUISE IS REPORTED

FIFTEEN MEMBERS OF LOCAL DIVISION OF M. N. B. HOME SATURDAY, REMAINDER SUNDAY

HAD A BIG TIME AT CHICAGO

Few Disembarked at Soo While Others Accompanied the Yantic to Hancock

The summer cruise of the training ship Yantic, one of the most enjoyable cruises the members of the local division have ever taken, came to a close on Saturday when the members of the various divisions disembarked at Hancock where the ship will remain for the winter.

Fifteen members of the local division disembarked at Sault Ste. Marie on Saturday morning and arrived here Saturday night at 8:35 o'clock. Accompanying them was Lieutenant Fraser, commander of the local division.

The remaining thirty members of the Escanaba division disembarked at Hancock and arrived here Sunday evening under command of Ensign Whitney, Lieutenant Compher having disembarked at Mackinac Island on Friday.

No untoward incident marked the cruise and all the local men are unanimous in declaring it the most enjoyable to date.

Leaving Escanaba Wednesday evening, August 13 the Yantic proceeded to Traverse City where the members of that division boarded the ship. Thursday afternoon the ships of the training fleet manuevered. The Yantic left that night for Chicago and arrived there Saturday morning. The remaining in that port until Wednesday morning.

While in Chicago the members of the brigade had the time of their lives. They did not participate in the parade as per schedule but spent the major portion of their time seeing the sights. The water carnival of Tuesday night, August 19, was especially enjoyable.

Leaving Chicago on Wednesday morning the Yantic proceeded north to Mackinac Island where the ship was in port a day and a night. Harbor Springs was visited, the Yantic being in port about twelve hours. From Harbor Springs the ship proceeded to the Soo where a portion of the Escanaba division disembarked. The final leg was from the Soo to Hancock where the cruise ended.

During the entire ten days of the cruise but one day's rough water was encountered. Leaving Chicago the lake roughened to the extent that the water rushed throughout the port holes and not a few of those on board hastened to leeward and carefully deposited their evening repast upon the whitecapped waters.

LICENSES FOR HUNTING HERE

FIRST BIRD LICENSE GRANTED TODAY—ALL LICENSES MUST BE SECURED AT COUNTY CLERK'S OFFICE

SEASON OPENS ON OCTOBER FIRST

Elimination of Fee Prohibits the Naming of Deputies Throughout the County

County Clerk Seamer has received the bird hunting licenses for the year 1913-14 an the first license granted was secured by C. E. Voght.

The season for birds opens on October 1 and the license is good from date of issue until April 1, 1914.

The license will cost the hunter $1.25 providing he is a resident, a non resident will be assessed $10. An alien non-resident who has declared his intention of becoming a citizen will be charged only the regular fee.

The act places the licenses at $1 each and provides no fee for the county clerk. It permits him, however, to charge the regular clerk's fee of twenty-five cents, bringing the cost to $1.25. The fact that no fee is provided for will eliminate the deputies throughout the county.

Last year there were from one to two deputies in each township who granted licenses. This year every license must be secured at the county clerk's office.

No person under 17 years of age will be granted a license. The license granted does not include a license to hunt deer.

(By Associated Press.)

Sherbrooke, Canada, Aug. 23.—Neither William Jerome for the state or Roger O'Mara for the Thaw family have arrived yet and it is believed there that Thaw will be deported to the Vermont line.

Thaw had a row with the jail authorities this morning because his breakfast from the hotel was late and showed the worst temper he has since his arrest. The many stories of the corrupting of the courts, judges and immigration officials, by the Thaw family are all baseless. He will be used the same as any other prisoner, that is held in this country.

SCISSORS ARE USED IN FIGHT

DRUNKEN AUSTRIAN ATTACKS FRIEND AT MAPLE RIDGE STABBING HIM WITH SCISSORS

ARRESTS MAN AFTER LONG CHASE

Club in Hands of Passerby Brings the Murderous Assault to an Abrupt Close

The timely arrival of William Hill and his efficient if not careful use of a club doubtless saved the life of August Houtla, an Austrian, attacked yesterday afternoon about four o'clock by Albin Ahlgren, a fellow Austrian.

Ahlgren used a small but sharply pointed pair of scissors in his attack on Houtla and as a result the latter is suffering from a wound at the base of the brain, another in the groin and a third in the cheek. When Hill arrived on the scene Houtla was lying on his face with Ahlgren on top jabbing viciously at the underman with his scissors.

Ahlgren and Houtla had been "buddies" yesterday they consumed more liquor than they could carry and maintain their equilibrium. On the county road just outside Maple Ridge they became embroiled in a quarrel. In the scuffle that followed Ahlgren threw Houtla down and drawing a pair of scissors started jabbing him at any and all available points. Thrice he jabbed and each stroke left a gaping wound.

At this juncture William Hill appeared, called to the scene by Houtla's screams for help. Taking in the situation at a glance he grabbed a club and welded it to such good effect that Ahlgren desisted.

Sheriff Curran was called and with Deputy George Curran he left at once for Maple Ridge. Ahlgren was captured with considerable difficulty. He fled into the woods and the officers followed him for several miles before they succeeded in capturing him. He was brought to Escanaba and locked up.

The defendant was arraigned before Judge Glaser this afternoon and was found guilty of assault and battery. He was sentenced to spend ninety days in the county jail.

WHAT CHANCE HAS A MAN?

"It was the biggest escape of my life," said the young man with the gray necktie, as he sank into a chair at the club with a relieved sigh. "I've just been seeing her off on the train. She came here two months ago to visit her aunt, and the only reason this minute that I'm not an engaged man and done for is that Providence watches over the unwary."

"I should have taken warning when her aunt mentioned casually one evening that Dora was coming to stay a while with her. She said that among all her nieces Dora shone a bright particular star, because of her lovely disposition and sweet ways. She said when Dora came she felt she could really take a rest, because the child was so clever about managing a house and overseeing servants."

"Well, Dora was pretty, terribly pretty, and attractive. I was so interested in those facts that I didn't even take warning when on my second call she confided to me that she never intended to marry."

"I expostulated with Dora. No girl had a right to say that, I told her gravely. She had no right to snatch from some despairing man his only hope of happiness and thus make his life a howling desert."

"I devoted that whole evening to trying to convince her how wrong she was. I could not bear to go away thinking I had left her still cherishing such reprehensible notions. I had plenty of opportunity to argue the matter with her afterward, for I was invited to dine so many times, and of course that meant dinner-calls and theatres to square myself."

"Presently Dora's aunt took a hand. She said it was a pity Dora was so particular, because she missed so many good times through that fault. She absolutely would not waste time talking to a man or accepting his invitations to theatres or parties unless he really interested her and she liked him."

"I had been seeing Dora about four times a week, so, naturally, I felt gratified. I observed tremulously that I hoped I had not been boring her. Dora's aunt shook her head solemnly. "Mr. Giller," she said, "I assure you I know no one with whom Dora feels more at home and happier than with you. I don't know when I've seen her so interested. It has pleased me so much that she really seemed to take such an interest in you. That has been the child's chief fault, her independence. She always acts as if she didn't care in the least whether anyone liked her or not. It is queer, for she has such a tender heart!"

"Any man would have been flattered to find that Dora liked him. I was so pleased about it that it was a shock, the next time I called, to find her engrossed in the conversation of Billings, who is an awful frost. I was very much surprised. Dora seemed to hang on his words. She paid scarcely any attention to me. When I left she smiled sweetly."

"It was next morning, in the middle of my second cup of coffee, that the great idea dawned on me that maybe she had been trying to make me jealous of Billings."

"I stayed away. Then Dora telephoned me in one over. She had on her prettiest gown and she was going to cook lobster in the chafing dish the way I liked it best. Oh, I was wide-awake enough now! That lobster Newburg to me was nothing but a large, deadly printed fishhook, and I was assigned the part of the fish."

"I floundered helplessly and escaped, although Dora leaned her head on one hand and posed beautifully over the chafing dish and talked about her indecision whether to take up settlement work or go as a missionary. She seemed a little irritated when I advocated the latter course."

"She announced later that the lobster Newburg was all gone. She did it in a tone of voice that said I'd better go home, so I went."

"Then Dora's aunt helped. She took to mentioning the heaps of letters Dora got from her home town, and hinted that Dora had come away to escape three adorers, each of whom had vowed to wed her. She asked Billings to dinner whenever she asked me, and politely insinuated to me in private that I had five miles to go and about two seconds to make it in if I was going to win in the race."

"I was scared to death by this time. You see, Dora really was very pretty and I was afraid that in some moment of aberration I might swallow the hook. I was in danger up to the very minute the train pulled out to-day."

"I didn't even let myself take a square look at Dora in her fascinating travelling suit till the wheels started to revolve. I was afraid I'd ask if I might write to her. I was bound I wouldn't do that. I'm perfectly safe now, if I can stop where I am!"

A horrified look suddenly spread over the face of the young man in gray. "Great Scott!" he breathed, pulling a pair of gloves out of his pocket. "Here are Dora's gloves! I remember, she asked me to take care of them while she attended to the baggage man! I'll—why, I'll have to write to her now when I send 'em! And she'll reply and ask me something, and I'll have to write again. Say, do you suppose she could have done that on purpose?"

"You're lost, all right!" sympathized his friend.

Climbing Army Ladder in England.

A return was issued quite recently showing the average time taken from the date of first commission in attaining respectively the ranks of captain and major of officers in the cavalry, royal artillery, royal engineers, infantry and Indian army.

The average time was lowest in the cavalry, the period being seven years and five months. Next comes the garrison artillery, with eight years, followed by the infantry, eight years and four months; field artillery, eight years and six months, and the engineers and Indian army, nine years. The two latter were time promotions.

The average time taken to reach the rank of major was: Cavalry, 14 years and ten months; field artillery, 17 years and six months; Indian army, 18 years; infantry, 18 years and three months; garrison artillery, 20 years. The Indian army period was a time promotion.—London Evening Standard.

A Last Farewell.

To be at the same time rude and polite is an achievement of great difficulty. A writer in the Philadelphia Ledger tells of a French gentleman who had finished his holiday in England, and had just paid a very large hotel bill. He was indignant, but his native courtesy was unimpaired.

"Send me proprietaries to me," he said to the waiter, and presently the host entered.

Monsieur was all smiles.

"Ah, let me embrace you!" he cried. "But why do you want to embrace me, sir? I don't understand."

"Ah, sir, but look at zee beel!"

"Your bill! Yes, but what of it?"

"Vot of it? Vy, it means zat I shall nevalre, nevalre see you again, saire."

TRIP AROUND WORLD ENDS

left home after completing his high school course, he was in poor health. After roughing it through many parts of the world he is now a perfect specimen, physically. When interviewed by a Tribune reporter Wednesday afternoon he talked interestingly of his many experiences while traveling through remote parts of the world.

Works His Way

"I left my home in Michigan with enough money to take me to Philadelphia from where I sailed on a cattle boat for England. Upon arriving in London I worked for a short time and then walked through England, Scotland and Ireland later going to Paris and visiting all parts of France. I would work at something until I had enough money to make a jump. While in London I worked as a reporter on two of the leading papers and at different times acted as correspondent for the New York Herald and the Chicago Tribune. I visited Rome arriving at that place with quite a sum of money and to give you an idea of how my fortunes fluctuated I spent the first four nights in a first class hotel and the next four sleeping in a park. After leaving Italy, I toured through Austria and next visited in Alexandria, Egypt."

Liked Australia

"I landed in Australia and liked the country so well that I remained there until my return home. I worked my way all around the coast of Australia and was engaged in many lines of business while there. I prospected through the gold fields and hunted for black opals (Australia is the only place where these gems can be found.) I traveled through New South Wales and became engaged as a farmer on a 'little' farm of about 1500 acres. When I received word that I was needed here I immediately sailed landing in 'Frisco' Thursday August 7 and coming directly to this city where I think I will locate permanently."

The Tumbling Cane. A little home diversion, which is as instructive to those who see it, as to balance a cane on the back of a chair so that the slightest touch will set it wavering. Then

A Lesson in Magnetism.

Notice that you can make it fall even touching it or even near it. This seems hard to do, but really it is easy. Prop a card and rub it briskly with the card. When it is held in one end of the cane the card attracts the cane downwards and overbalances and topples to the a comet. Subsequent observations soon decide the point. Only the most interesting ones are afterward observed with attention; but once discovered they cannot be ignored, and the rapid growth of the flock becomes an embarrassment. Eros, which at times approaches the earth nearer than any other regular member of the solar system except the moon, and Asteroid No. 588, which at aphelion is more distant than Jupiter, remain, as far as their orbits are concerned, the most interesting members of the entire group, and are kept under constant observation whenever circumstances permit.

To Remove Hot Cake

Take two pieces of board a little wider and several inches longer than your cake pan. Bore holes all over one piece with an augur, and when you take your cake out of the oven put the plain piece across the top of pan, turn the cake out on it immediately, put the piece of board with holes in it on the cake and lightly turn it over on it. Then set the board across a pan or bowl so the air can get to the bottom of cake and so let the steam escape. This is especially nice for sponge cake, gingerbread or, in fact, any light cake.

Apple Butter Hints

To avoid the long, tiresome stirring of apple butter set the pan in the oven of the range with a slow fire. It will cook evenly, without burning or splashing walls or floor.

CREAMED CABBAGE—Chop fine in the meat chopper as much cabbage as will be needed and boil in salted water until tender. To one quart of boiled cabbage add cream with a piece of butter as large as a walnut; salt and pepper. Cook this over hot water until the cream is nearly absorbed.

RUSK—Scald one pint of milk. Dissolve in it two tablespoonfuls of butter and a half teaspoonful of salt. When lukewarm add one-half of a yeast cake dissolved in a little warm water and sufficient sifted flour to make a drop batter. Beat well, cover and set aside until light. Beat together three eggs and one scant cupful of sugar. Add this to the sponge when light, with a half cupful of flour; beat and let raise again. When very spongy stir in sufficient flour to make a soft dough and knead until smooth. Put aside again until night, then take off pieces the size of a large egg and mold into round biscuits. Put close together in well greased deep pans, brush the tops with milk, and when very tight bake in a moderate oven; they must not be very brown when done. To dry them, let stand for a day, then break or cut each rusk in halves. Spread on flat pans and let stand in the open oven for a day or more until thoroughly dried. Keep in a tight can or covered stone crock.

Snobbery in U.S. Army

"It seems to me that the heads of the navy and army departments have come to the conclusion that we will never again have actual need of a military force, and that the proper thing to do now is to organize the army and navy on strict social lines."

This is part of the comment of Mrs. William Grant Brown, president of the Federation of Women's clubs, on the recent order of the superintendent of the Naval Academy, forbidding midshipmen in their first year to make any acquaintances in the city of Annapolis or visit anyone but their relatives.

It is calmly announced that the reason for the rule is that it will prevent the young men from making "undesirable acquaintances." It is a sequel to the recent case of Miss Beers, an estimable and entirely respectable young woman, who was snubbed at an Academy function because the misfortune of her financial position forced her to work as a governess.

"I suppose," said Mrs. Brown with an amused smile, "that the social directory of New York will presently be edited from the Brooklyn Navy Yard or from Governors Island. If this attitude of the military departments of the government were not so seriously un-American it would be highly amusing."

"I suppose it is largely the fault of the American people," continued Mrs. Brown reflectively. "We have adopted a patriotic and highly commendable plan of accepting the uniform of the army and navy as a card of social eligibility. It is not a tribute to the class of men who go to West Point or to Annapolis. It is simply that we feel a respect for a man who is supposed to have dedicated his life to the service of a government that we honor."

This has given the graduates of West Point and Annapolis the impression that by virtue of their graduation they have gone through some magic crucible that has made them a little different and above the ordinary run of human beings. Inversely it is born of the same snobbery that would have prevented enlisted men in uniform from going into our theaters.

"As a broad and general rule it is safe to assume that a man who wears the uniform of an officer in the army or navy of the United States is likely to be a gentleman. I am sorry to say that at the present rate of procedure it will presently be safe to assume that he is a ridiculous snob."

"I do not want to give the impression that I think that because a man has graduated from one of our military academies he is necessarily a gentleman in all that that title implies. As a matter of fact, their training in those schools generally makes them incapable of breadth of thought that makes for a truly useful citizen. I only mean to say that they are generally socially possible."

"In this they are not entirely to blame. It is the fault of the system under which they are educated and this recent move of the authorities of the Naval Academy is merely another demonstration. They are seldom big, wholesome men. They do not enter the service in the spirit that would make it possible for them to be big wholesome men."

"A man who makes up his mind to accept a splendid education from his country and in return devote his life to the service of his country should be above little social nonsense. He should be a great deal more than that. He has no right to marry. He cannot be a companion protector of his wife. His duties forbid it. He should go into the army or navy as a man would go into the priesthood—sacrificing all to the service of his country."

"To be a soldier of the Republic is not a frivolous social privilege. It is the big life-work of big men. When there is another call to the colors we want to know that the men who are supposed to safeguard us and be ready to defend us are serious-minded, conscientious workmen in the work to which they have given themselves—not a contemptible, irrational crowd of mobs and social climbers."

Washing Without Rubbing

Soak clothes in cold water for an hour or so. Where hard water is used in washing use one and one-half bars any laundry soap. Cut up fine in one pail of water; heat to boiling point or until soap is dissolved, then add three tablespoonfuls of kerosene and half fill boiler with liquid; wring out fine clothes and boil them, pounding with clothes stick frequently; remove from suds and rinse thoroughly. Treat the coarser garments in like manner, and before you realize it your washing will be done, and with little or no rubbing. Towels and the more soiled pieces will, of course, require some rubbing, but this process will reduce the drudgery to a minimum. Where soft water is used one bar of soap will be sufficient for a big family washing.

Brown Sugar Cookies

Cream together two-thirds of a cup of butter and two-thirds of a cup of brown sugar, then add one egg. When well beaten together stir in one cup of rolled oats and two-thirds of a cup of English walnuts chopped fine. Lastly add one cup of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder. Sift the baking powder with the flour. This recipe will make between twenty-five and thirty. A delightful icing for cakes can be easily made by melting one-fourth of a cake of chocolate in four tablespoonfuls of sweet milk. When cool work in one cup of powdered sugar which has been sifted twice. This icing will keep moist.

Philosophy of Woman

It was raining and dismal, so three good friends decided to spend the afternoon together and have a cup of tea and a long talk. Sitting in the big living room their chat had somehow drifted away from the household practical matters to subjects literary and more or less sentimental. The discussion began with the telling of a recent magazine story, which had impressed one of the women greatly.

"The finest bit in the entire story came at the end," she declared. "You see, the adoring and wealthy young wife had just discovered that the love letters she had written her husband before they were married and before she had inherited her money had never been read by him at all. In these letters she had poured out her very soul to him, and he had never opened them, but tucked them away in an old coat, where she had found them, still sealed and forgotten, five years afterward. He had told her over and over again what these letters had done to him—how beautiful and precious—and the discovery of his deception and all that it implied hurt deeply, almost tearing away the foundation of her married happiness."

"When, however, a romantic spinster friend had urged her to leave the selfish hypocrite, the wife had cried out with that rare understanding of a great love, 'Oh, Melia! Poor Amelia! You don't know anything. You don't know anything at all.' Wasn't that splendid?"

Wife's Trust Destroyed Forever.

"Noble," answered one of the women, smiling sarcastically, "but think of what she had to endure all the years afterward. That wasn't a sorrow she could have a real good cry about or lie awake over for three or four nights and then rise up and kill for all time. The man in this story didn't do anything wicked or criminal, but what he did do destroyed his wife's old blessed trust in him, and always in the future she would doubt his most sincere expressions of love and be suspicious of every act."

"The contentment of love, which all wives need to feel more than anything else in this world, would always be struggling with that little ghost in her memory which would never let her forget. It isn't a great big trouble which destroys a woman's happiness, but it is these phantoms that return again and again, even in one's happiest hours, that are like Banquo's ghost, even at the feast.

"That unhappy look you see on the faces of so many women is rarely caused by some great anguish, but by some lesser trouble that they are unnecessarily allowing to torture them. I've known women to fret themselves into old age because their husbands did not care for society, while other women secretly grieve because their husband's always act bored when alone with them. Women who do not receive a regular allowance from their husbands will have a worried look in their eyes all their life; the woman who has married a pronounced egotist will develop a bad temper unless she has a sense of humor, and the man whose grammar and mannerisms are humiliating invariably has a wife with a drooping head and sad mouth. All praise should be given a wife who can continue to love her husband when she does not always like him."

Weak Spot Always Shows.

"There isn't a woman in this country," began another in the group, "no matter how happily married, but who could admit to one big disappointment in her husband. She always finds the weak spot sooner or later in her Achilles, but if she is smart she keeps her gaze away from this blot: If her husband is vain or stingy or extravagant or lazy she must constantly keep in mind all his good qualities, remember his kindness in her last illness, his devotion to his children, his splendid laugh, and the wonderful blue of his eyes or the richness of his deep voice."

"Men sometimes complain that women have almost too good a memory, but many a wife has found life tolerable with her husband only because he was such a beautiful lover in the days of their courtship. Women who have drawn the most miserable failures in marriage have never been disillusioned or become indifferent because they managed always to hold onto that first glorious dream the loved one promised them."

"The most devoted wife I ever knew, when dying whispered to the husband who was begging forgiveness for all the cruel hurts he had given her. 'It's all right, all right,' but oh, say, 'sweetheart' again—'way you used to.'"

Men's Emotions Different.

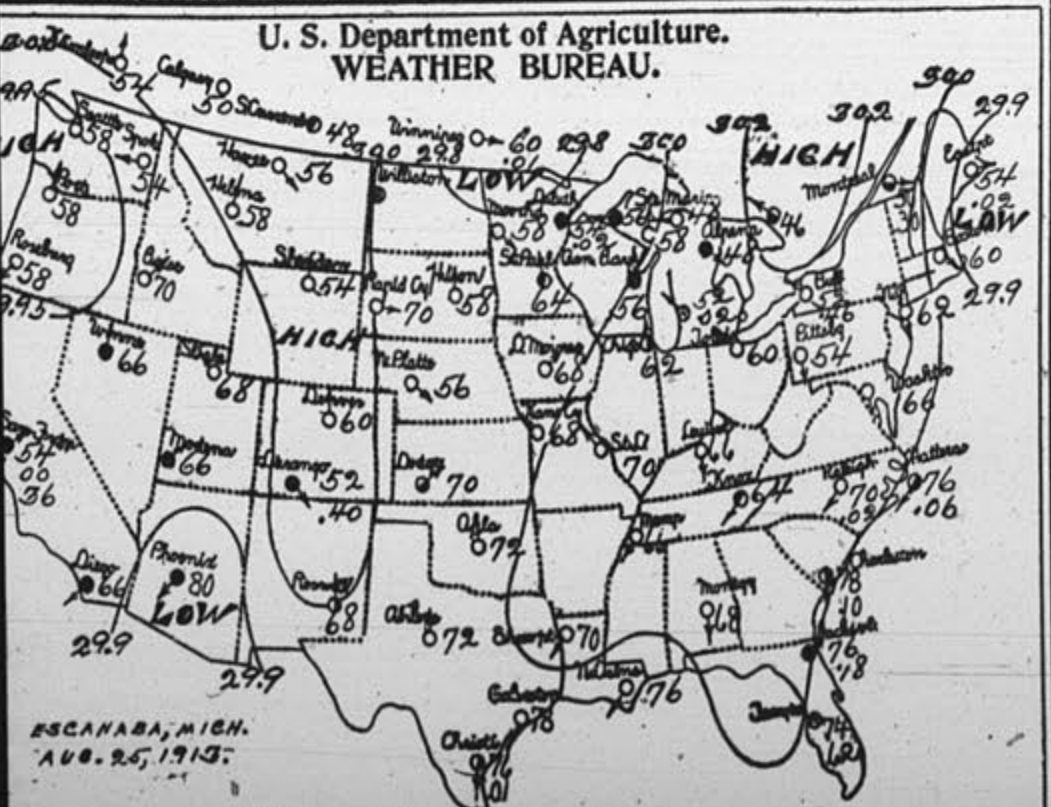

"Isn't it true," asked one of the women, "that in the most tender emotions men are different from women. To them love is a great thing, and perhaps for a few months or years quite the greatest thing, but never the only thing, for lesser affairs—probably business interests and struggles—have a wonderful way of combining and forcing the greatest thing to the wall. In the busy competitive life of today men have found out that they must work for love as well as dream of love."

"It seems, however, the hardest thing in the world for a woman, susceptible, impulsive, and ardent as her nature invariably is, to accept the fact that a great love must be a wise one if she desires it to grow and broaden with the years. The happiest wives I know are those who have given up trying to make over their husband's to suit their own particular fancy. So many wives when they get up against a brick wall in their married life will lie awake nights, fret all day, and cry in between times trying to push it over. When they become wiser they just settle down and make themselves comfortable as far away from it as possible."

"Just one more question," asked the first woman to speak. "What is the secret of happiness?" "Something to hope for, something to work for, something to love—and that is all."

Hindering the Beem. The pride of locality, which is so insisted upon in certain small Western towns, had an amusing illustration, says a writer in Puck, in a place by the name of Puxico. The landlord of the tavern was telling a friend about the arrest of a feller for walking down Main street in the middle of the afternoon in his stocking feet. He's in jail now," continued the narrator, when the other interrupted.

"Why," cried his friend, "it isn't a crime, is it, for a person to walk in his stocking feet? Personal liberty, my dear sir—" "Aw," replied the eloquent landlord, "personal liberty is proper enough as long as it don't interfere with the rights of other people. Anything tends to add to the silence of our little city is an offense against the general welfare. We're public-spirited here, even if we ain't exactly metropolitan."

TRAVELING AND THE TABLE

Editor Edward Bok finds the season a good one for preambles about voyages. "The benefit we get from travel depends entirely upon how we do it," he muses. "There are too many who travel like the girl who had to write for school a diary of her trip abroad. Here is an extract: 'Clovily—Ate three plates of strawberries and clotted cream for lunch. Heavenly! Could have eaten more, but mother made me stop. Paris—Went to tea at Rumpelmayer's; was so excited, for they had such cakes!'" What is there shocking in these journal extracts, Mr. Bok? Have you, too, not visited Clovily and Paris? Have you not, too, eaten Devonshire strawberries and cream, and Rumpelmayer's succulent pastries? If so, and you have failed to appreciate your opportunities as this honest schoolgirl did here, be upon you for a bigoted editor, with a head full of fashion! A European voyage is a gastronomic education to the educable, says the New York Tribune. To find berries and cream at Clovily "heavenly," is only to do justice to one of nature's masterpieces; to taste the compote de fraises at Foyot's or the cakes at Rumpelmayer's in the Rue de Rivoli with pleasurable excitement is but to do homage to man's improvement upon nature. There was an individual who could keep Venice and Florence apart in his memory only by recalling his purchase of a new undershirt at Venice. That was a stupid traveler, indeed. But the table traveler, who cultivates gastronomic delights geographically, is a traveler whose vista is one of limitless possibilities.

"Eating humble pie" is a phrase which really arose from the corruption of the word "umbles" or "numbles," the coarser parts of a deer killed in hunting, which, when made into a pie, were formerly reserved for the lower hunt servants; while "cooking his goose" is a phrase which originated with the king of Sweden, on approaching a hostile town, excited the contempt of the inhabitants by the smallness of his army. To express this they hung out a goose for him to shoot at, whereupon the king set fire to the town to "cook their goose."

The determination of an English minister in this country to become naturalized, on the ground that he did not care for kings, has aggrieved the English journals, one of which sarcastically remarks that no nation under heaven sets a higher value on kings than the United States. But this value is a spectacular one only, just as the national American heart yearns over the gaudy trappings of the circus, says the Baltimore American. When it comes down to business, our only wonder is that kings are still taken seriously.

The fact that the eighty-year-old duke of Bavaria has just been divorced from his second morganatic wife, ex-ballet girl and forty years his junior, shows that the monarchies of Europe are not so effete as they are painted. This gay old benedict may possibly again take the matrimonial field.

A man in Reno got a divorce on the ground that his wife threw carbolic acid at him, boiling water over him, stabbed him with a sword and tried to roast him alive. The most critical will allow that he had a right, at least, to be peevish over the conditions of his home life.

OWNER MURPHY IN FAVOR OF SLANG IN BALL STORIES.

By C. W. MURPHY, president Chicago Nationals.
A certain amount of slang must of necessity be injected into a crisp, snappy review of baseball games. Some writers go to extremes, however, in making use of slang expressions. I believe the fans who daily attend the games and hear the phrases that go echoing through the stands and bleachers are thoroughly at home when reading slangy descriptions of the game. Some correspondents detailed to baseball work are peculiarly gifted and able to express themselves clearly through the slang medium without boring their readers. Others make tiresome efforts, forcing meaningless words into their stories in ridiculous attempts at humor. Give me the snappy baseball stories with a proper portion of the vernacular that goes with the sport.

BRITISH WHITE HOPE.

Dick Smith, Amateur Champion, Joins the Pros.
Since the defeat of Bombardier Wells, the heavyweight champion of Great Britain, by "Gunboat" Smith in New York the Britishers have been casting about for another "white hope" — one who will be able to "stand the gaff" and weather the storm when it comes to body punishment, and from information at hand they have unearthed another "hope" in the person of Dick Smith, the amateur champion of England.
Dick has decided to throw in his lot with the professionals. Born just twenty-seven years ago, Smith possesses all the necessary qualifications for a white hope and may go further than some of the blasted hopes to whom they have looked as supporters of British boxing. He stands six feet one and one-half inches, weighs about 150 pounds and has a very satisfactory record. Of his forty-nine contests Smith has won forty-five, lost three and drawn one. Formerly a soldier, he followed Bombardier Wells as champion of India. As an amateur boxer he has done remarkably well, having won the championship of Great Britain in 1911, 1912 and 1913 while a member of the London police force. As he will now box for money he will leave the force.

TRAVERS GOING ABROAD.

Noted American Golf Champion Will Again Meet Hilton.
Jerry Travers, the American amateur golf champion and who is a member of the Upper Montclair (N. J.) Golf club, has decided that the Britishers shall have an opportunity to view his style of play.
Travers, not content with being the golfing sensation of the United States.

Travers at top of swing with midiron and his putting club.

will sail for London in September and clash drivers and mashes. The American experts believe that Travers will defeat the best of the transatlantic players. His leading match will be with H. H. Hilton, the present amateur champion of Great Britain. Hilton defeated Travers in their match in this country, but the Jerseyman has improved his game greatly since that time.

Men, Read This

AT THE BEGINNING of the theatrical season I desire to address a few earnest, heartfelt, tearful words to men. Gentlemen, you have passed a law requiring women to remove their hats in the theatre, and to their credit, women obey this law without protest, although it subjects them to much inconvenience, and is a blow to their vanity, since a woman's hat is to her face as a frame to a picture, and enhances her good looks 50 per cent. Nevertheless, women recognize that it makes for the common good, and comfort, and pleasure of an audience for them not to obscure the stage by their millinery, and so at the theatre they cheerfully wear their hats in their laps instead of on their heads.

Now, as the ordinance in regard to women's hats in the theatre has worked out so well, I ask you, in the name of justice and humanity to pass another law making it a misdemeanor for men to go out between the acts, thereby inflicting bodily injury on women, and ruin on their clothes. What women suffer from this nuisance no tongue may tell, but it converts theatre-going from the joy and pleasure it was meant to be to a martyrdom that calls for the display of all the Christian virtues of resignation under persecution and forgiveness for undesired afflictions. No one save a woman can realize the fearful anxiety with which a woman views the men who sit in the same row with her at the play, and how eagerly she scans each face as it appears, to try to anticipate whether it belongs to a gentleman who is capable of sitting quietly in his seat for a couple of hours, or if it is the mug of a well-dressed hoodlum, who will trample her underfoot ruthlessly six or seven times during the evening as he passes back and forth to the neighboring bar room.

For on her seat neighbor's conduct depends the woman's pleasure and the state of her wardrobe, for it is impossible to appreciate even the finest play when one's toes are writhing in agony from having had a two-hundred pound man step on them, and one has had one's best frock mussed and torn by the clumsy elephant that has just dragged over one's lap.

Perhaps, if men realized just how much inconvenience and annoyance they put women to by climbing over them between acts at the theatre they would show more consideration in the matter. Therefore, I call the attention of each gentleman who may chance to read these lines to two important facts. The first is that the space between the rows of seats in a theatre is not designed for a promenade. In order for any person in a row to pass out, every other person in that row has got to get up and stand up, flattened against his or her own seat, and with his or her belongings clutched in his or her hand to prevent the destruction of said articles. It is a most tiresome, awkward, and inconvenient position for anybody to be called upon to assume, and nobody except a human hog would be selfish enough to ask such a sacrifice of his fellow-creatures.

The second point to which I direct my readers' notice is that at the theatre a woman is encumbered with the following articles—a wrap, a fan, a handkerchief, opera glasses, a bag and her hat. Six articles in all, which she has to grab up and hold above her head out of danger every time the perigrinating pig makes his pilgrimage to the drink trough. Nobody short of a slight hand performer can make a lightning grab at all of these different things, and keep them from being torn, broken, or mashed, and the result is that almost every time something is broken and destroyed, a result which is not atoned for by a granted apology.

Naturally men will deny that they all scale the mountain passes of women's frowns at the theatre in order to drink. They say they wished to stretch their legs, and that they get tired and nervous sitting still. I have the warmest sympathy for people with St. Vitus' dance, or any malady that renders it impossible for them to keep quiet, but surely such afflicted individuals should have enough consideration to always buy seats where they can get in and out without disturbing the public, or else the theatre management should segregate them in some section of the theatre where they can step on each other without worrying anybody else.

The truth of the matter is that there is no earthly excuse, except violent illness, for any man not to sit out a play without annoying every woman in his vicinity. There is a law that makes women take off their hats in the theatre, and there should be another one to prevent men from going out between the acts.

Cottage Cheese

Cottage cheese made from skimmed milk, enriched with cream or other fat, is pronounced a "cheap, digestible and nutritious food," as a result of recent experiments made by the United States Department of Agriculture. This accords with the recommendation made some time ago in these hints favoring cottage cheese in preference to even the best old cheese, which, although it has been proved more digestible than meat and a better source of protein, has yet occasionally caused poisoning. The average person eats too much protoid, but cottage cheese is a good substitute for meat, and as the price of meat must advance the masses must learn to use less.

THE VOICE.

Little Hubert's mother sent him on an errand to a neighbor's house. The servant showed him into a pretty reception-room. He remembered to sit quietly. Even though he heard a fluttering in the next room, and there were only curtains between, he did not leave his chair to peep, or see what it was.

But the next minute he had such a surprise! A great, loud, hearty voice cried: "Why, hello, Hubert! So you've got back again! How do you do! How do you do! I'm glad to see you? Yes, that's so! Whoa, Kit-ty! Stand still, whoa! Bow-wow-wow! Bow-wow-wow! Lie down, Prince! Yes, good dog! Good Prince!" And then came a sound like the squeaking of the screen.

A more astonished little boy could not be found. He expected every minute to see the master of the house walk through the curtain before him, but there was only the soft fluttering sound he had heard before. It was very hard to sit still. He wanted to go into the next room and see who it was that was calling him, and what all the commotion was about; but mother had always told him not to talk about or to meddle while waiting.

Just then the maid entered the dining-room to prepare the table for supper, making just a little bit of noise with the silver and dishes. Then the voice cried again. "Is that pretty good? I want some! I want some! Caw! caw! caw! Pretty Polly! Pretty Polly!" And then Hubert knew that it was the parrot talking all the time.

He wanted to go in more than ever; but just that moment the maid brought in the note he was waiting for, and he was obliged to go. "But how did he know my name?" he asked his mother. "It was just like Mr. Gray's voice."

"Don't you remember Mr. Gray's first name?"
"No, mamma, you always call him Mr. Gray."
"Well, it's Hubert, just like yours. The parrot was just imitating both Mr. and Mrs. Gray's talk when he drives out of the city, and the dog runs out to meet him. They say it is very funny to hear the parrot coax for something to eat when they are dining. The Gray's parrot is a wonderful bird. Some day we will go over and visit him. I don't wonder you were surprised, sitting there all alone. It isn't every little boy that can have a stranger parrot call him by name as though he knew him."—Edith Perry Estes, in Youth's Companion.

Why Not "My Husband?"
In "Questions of Good Form" the query "How should a woman refer to her husband?" was recently asked and answered. Should not the reply have included with "Mr. Smith" and "John" the term "my husband?"—Saxon.

This good old-fashioned term is unfortunately not considered as good form as "Mr. Smith" and "John" or "Jack." In fact, it is hardly heard at all in the smart set, as it sounds too possessive for their fancy.

It is not sufficiently formal to use to an acquaintance or a tradesman, and to an intimate friend it is too stilted. For these reasons it has fallen into disfavor with fashionable people.

A Honey-moaner's Question

IN THE DELIRIUM of their honey-moon He and She vowed to keep no secrets from each other. "I will show you every letter I get," said She, "and I will let you read every letter sent to me," said He.

It started off beautifully, of course, for they were still delirious, and he, poor man, did not know all that the reading of a woman's correspondence entailed. But he knows now, and his brain begins to throb in painful anticipation every time he hears the postman's whistle.

The letters she receives are from her friends and kin, and are all written by women. True to her promise she lays them out before him every evening and for two hours he is reading straight across and then crosses, jumping from the first page to the third, and doing a puzzle in finding out what page to jump to next. He is reading that Aunt Susan has papered her parlor in green, and mother would like the enclosed sample of linen matched, if possible, and if not a lighter shade will do, and Cousin Kate wants the enclosed sample of hair matched and are they wearing puffs and do they sell by the pound or the yard, and Lillie Smith has a new beau, what DO you think of that, and the Widow Barnes was out riding with a man one evening last week, and her husband not yet cold, and this writer didn't have good luck with her bread last week, and that writer is making peach preserves and another writer hopes she isn't letting her husband impose on her the way all big brides do, and how does she make mustard pickles?

"Here," says she, when he has settled down to an evening with his paper, "is a letter from mother you haven't read," and when he opens it he is seized with such a feeling of depression he wonders if he is coming down with a fever, but after he has dutifully read the letter she hands him another from her grandmother, and he decides it is a chill.

There are letters from women friends to be read at breakfast, letters from her mother and sisters at luncheon and all her cousins and aunts are represented in the mail at dinner, till he thinks he is going to die every time he sees an envelope. If he hesitates, "You are not interested in my letters," she pouts, "and I am so interested in yours," and, though she never reads anything of interest in his mail, she is always sure that some day there will be, and her hope never flags, and he is growing gaunt and pale, haunted in every waking hour by something the postman has brought telling news of a neighbor's new cow, or that some one is trying to be young by retouching her hair.

If he intercepts the postman and destroys letters directed to his wife, he will be guilty of violation of the Government's postal laws; and if he refuses to read them, he will be a brute, and so he has laid before Lyander John Appleton, Kin Commissioner-General of the United States the following question:

TUXEDO WAFERS—One cupful of butter, two cupfuls of light brown sugar, one cupful of milk, three and one-half cupfuls of flour, one teaspoonful of ground ginger. Rub butter and sugar to a cream; add milk, ginger and flour. Spread a thin coating of butter on a smooth even, baking tin. When this butter layer becomes cold and set, then spread the paste evenly over it, no thicker than a visiting card. Use pulverized peanuts or other nuts and spread evenly over the paste before baking. Bake in a slack oven. When they turn a light brown take from the oven and cut the sheet immediately into the shape and size of a playing card.

Use for Old Roller Skate

Do not throw away old roller skates, for they make fine toy wagons. Get an old peach grape basket and fasten it securely on top of skate, bore two holes in end of basket close together and pass a string through these and tie, and you have a wagon all ready for baby.

"I don't see, lanthe, why you pe... in going to the country every season," said Mrs. Montague, frowning lightly.

Lanthe, a tall, graceful girl of 20, smiled wisely. "I think you have a lot of things to go to," she answered. Mrs. Montague flushed a little and looked uncomfortable.

"You must have seen that I love you, lanthe," he began boldly, just as if he had been her equal. "If you can only care for me a little I shall be the happiest man on earth."

Lanthe was silent, but she thought rapidly. She must not listen to him, she told herself. It would break her mother's heart if she should promise to marry James Clifford.

Lanthe looked up shyly. "I haven't said--I didn't care," she faltered. "Is it possible that you care for a poor man?" he asked, reaching over and taking one of the small hands in his own.

"I've something to confess, lanthe," he said after a moment. There was an anxious look on his face. "I'm not what you thought me," he went on. "I've deceived you, but say you'll forgive me--"

Lanthe looked into his face with a smile. "There's really nothing for me to forgive," she murmured happily. Priscilla Campbell.

"I have something to say to you, Miss Montague," he said, seating himself beside her on the settee. "Miss Kingsley has told me that you think of returning home to-morrow."

"Yes," she answered briefly. This was an unheard-of liberty for him, to sit beside her, and she tried to look displeased, but she made a miserable failure of it.

"You must have seen that I love you, lanthe," he began boldly, just as if he had been her equal.

"Are you angry, lanthe?" he asked when she did not speak. "I understand--you don't care for me and--"

OUR BOYS and GIRLS

PROTECTIVE COLORING.

By Alice Van Leer Carrick.

Emily despised her play frocks. "Just green flimsies and brown gingham, old grass color and dirt color. Muriel Willoughby's mother lets her wear blue dresses and pink dresses, and lovely white shoes and stockings," she complained, as she sat on the piazza steps.

"Protective coloring, little girl," laughed her uncle, who was making her a willow whistle. "Your mother knows the way you play."

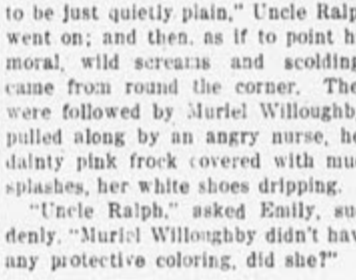

"What does 'protective coloring' mean, 'Uncle Ralph'?" asked Emily, slowly.

"Once upon a time," began Uncle Ralph, not answering her question, "once upon a time there was a green caterpillar, just the color of the grass and leaves he crawled upon. And one day this caterpillar said to himself, 'What a plain little thing I really am! No one notices me. I might as well not be alive at all.' He was so cross that he didn't eat another bit of rose-leaf, but instead he spun himself a nice, white, webby cocoon hammock, and slept a long, long time. By and by, when he woke up, he felt different. He wasn't a crawly worm any more. He had wide, downy wings. And then he cried, in the gladdest surprise, 'I'm a beautiful painted butterfly! Now people will look at me and praise me!' And they did. As he flew, zigzagging over the clover-fields, a man with a butterfly-net cried, 'What a fine specimen! I must have him!' The butterfly was so pleased at this admiration that he let himself be easily caught. He never got away again. Sometimes it's a good thing to be just quietly plain."

"Uncle Ralph" went on; and then, as if to point his moral, wild screams and scoldings came from round the corner. They were followed by Muriel Willoughby, pulled along by an angry nurse, her dainty pink frock covered with mud-splashes, her white shoes dripping.

"Uncle Ralph," asked Emily, suddenly. "Muriel Willoughby didn't have any protective coloring, did she?"

"Dolly and Alice. I'm just a little doll, you see. So you must not be harsh with me."

Were I to fall I'd break in two: Then what would little Alice do? Dear little Alice! She owns me; I think they say she is but three. At least, I know 'she isn't old. For they don't play with dolls, I'm told. Dear Alice brings me candy sweet, She keeps me dressed so very neat.

Few marine animals seem at first glance to betray less intelligence than the jellyfish. Up with the tide and down with the tide, carried along by 'his or that current, moving with the eddy of a backwater hither and thither, the jellyfish has become almost a synonym for helplessness. Scientifically, of course, the popular idea of the jellyfish is wholly mistaken, but it is perhaps only in tropical waters that he is found in the perfection of intelligence. In the South Pacific, around the islands of Polynesia, and as far south as the upper portion of the North Island of New Zealand there is a jellyfish who not only knows where he wants to go but is even provided with a sail which he can and does hoist or lower at will. The sail, like the rest of this curious animal, is almost transparent, but unlike the body of the fish, which is of the usual gelatinous construction, the sail is a membrane almost as hard as shell.

Roundabout the Ellice group the navigating fish is often found with a sail measuring five inches across, and he navigates the shallow island waters with the skill of a Hooghly pilot, steering in and out of snaggy places and avoiding obstructions both above and below the surface with unerring skill. Like his cousins in home waters this navigating jellyfish has the power of stinging its natural enemies, and its sting is fatal to fish and dangerous to man.--London Standard.

Where Women Win

WHEN AN ENGLISHMAN traveling abroad meets a woman laden in a manner suggestive of a moving van, whilst her spouse, comparatively lightly burdened, saunters in front, he righteously thanks Providence for "making such a thing impossible in the United Kingdom."

But he is unmindful of the fact that in the British Islands are at least one woman dock laborer, several thousand women who earn their living at the pit's mouth, and hundreds who forge chains for less than six cents an hour.

Indeed, very few trades or professions are now closed to women. Only recently the judges at the London Sessions mentioned that many women act as professional pawners for the district in which they reside. They know how to pledge property to the best advantage, they have none of the shyness of their clients, and they never take less than four cents a pledge--oftentimes much more.

According to the last published census returns, there are in London fifty-four feminine chimney sweepers, three lady gamekeepers, two policemen and one lady cabman and a lady taxi cab driver, whose services are in great demand.

Women street bookmakers are quite common, but women barbers are not so plentiful, although there is an establishment in London controlled by ladies, where a flourishing business is carried on.

And so recently as the last Easter a woman was appointed sexton of Howland Abbey, the office having been held by the family to which she belongs since 1792.

One of the most successful commercial travelers in the United Kingdom is a woman, and if you pay a visit to the historic town of Bradford, in Middlesex, you will find the local newspaper set up by female labor. The women "comps" do their work very well, too; and one girl, who possesses only one eye, not long ago set up a full column of nonpareil, which is very small type without a single mistake--even so much as a turned letter.

Unlike their American cousins, the English cannot boast of the woman omnibus conductor, but they have woman station mistresses, a woman lamplighter, female agricultural laborers, a woman town crier, accountants, copper miners, stone quarriers, slate workers, millwrights, turners, boiler-makers, shipwrights, slaters, bricklayers, gasfitters, bell ringers, slaughterers and over a hundred scavengers.

It wants a tremendous amount of pluck for a woman to walk the streets carrying a sandwich-board, or to be the "person in possession," but there are women who so earn their living. But these are not nearly so well paid as the woman pavement artist, who works the London suburbs. Neatly dressed, surrounded by a swirl of mystery, uncommittal and courteous, she wins a good deal of sympathy from passers-by--sympathy which takes an intensely practical form.

A New Apron

The luncheon-apron of white lawn is quite short with a two-inch band.

border. The wide bib comes over the shoulder in a Gibson plait effect and is made with a white collar, very much on the order of a waitress' apron. A narrow fold down the center of the bib is edged on each side with a narrow ruffle of the material, with a narrow hem, trimmed with extremely narrow lace.

Baby's Daily Program

A card in connection with a course of lectures on "Health" was recently received. On the back of the card appeared the following valuable hints to mothers.

Always feed the baby at regular intervals--every two hours at first, gradually lengthening the intervals to three hours.

Always wash out the baby's mouth twice a day--night and morning. Always keep the baby very clean. Always bathe (or sponge all over) the baby once daily in warm water.

Always let the baby sleep in a cradle or cot, never in the same bed with its mother.

Always attend to the baby when it cries. The baby cries for one of three things: 1. The baby is hungry. 2. The baby is uncomfortable, or something hurts. 3. The baby is ill.

Always send for a doctor if the baby is ill. Babies are soon overcome and easily die.

Not Even the First Step. Mr. Morse having bought a new bicycle of the most improved pattern, presented his old one to Dennis Haloran, who did errands and odd jobs for the neighborhood. "You'll find the wheel useful when you're in a hurry, Dennis," he said.

The young Irishman was loud in his thanks, but regarded the wheel doubtfully.

"I mistrust 'twill be a long while before I can ride it," he said.

"Why, have you ever tried?" asked Mr. Morse.

"I have," said Dennis, gloomily. "A frind lint me the loan of his wishes he has having the moomps. 'Twas 'tween weeks I had it, an' what wild practicing night an' morning, I niver got so I could balance meself standing still, let alone riding on it."

Battle Royal with a Whale.

The enormous strength of a large whale was demonstrated by the recent experience of the steam whaler, Samson, in the Norway seas. On Sandefjord the commander of the Samson succeeded in lodging a harpoon in the flank of a whale, which in the eyes of the sailors was of monstrous length. The whale took to flight, towing the little steamer after it. When the rope had run out to its full length the engine was reversed, so that, normally, it would have given a backward speed of 10 knots. Still the whale continued to tow the vessel during a period of eight hours, at the end of which the cable parted, and the charmed crew saw their prey escape with the steamer.

Keep Your Blood Cool by Right Kind of Food and Enjoy Hot Weather

It's largely a matter of selecting the hot weather diet with reason.

Summer is Nature's season of activity--seed-time, growing-time, harvest-time--a time of expansion, energy--and Man is influenced to do his part--to put forth greater effort because activity is in the very air.

BUT--caution is necessary to avoid excessive heat from combustion (digestion) of heavy, greasy food. (Nature's way of generating body-heat in winter) in addition to the heat of the summer atmosphere.

GRAPE-NUTS

is the Ideal Food for hot weather because, being largely predigested (and concentrated) in the making at the factory, it is quickly absorbed, a small quantity affording great endurance with little effort in digesting it.

Grape-Nuts, made of Whole Wheat and Barley, contains all the natural elements of these cereals, including the phosphate of potash grown in the grain for rebuilding waste tissue cells, especially of brain and nerves.

Try for breakfast, bunch or supper:

A Little Fruit; Saucer of Grape-Nuts and Cream; A Soft Boiled Egg; Slice of Crisp Toast, and a Cup of Postum, hot--or iced with sugar and lemon.

Surprising how cool, yet full of healthy energy and "go" one feels on such a meal no matter what the weather.

HOW THE FLY GETS IN.

It Cannot See But Is Attracted by Odors from Inside.

The fly has one supreme motive in life—to move toward the strongest smell. He enters the house because there are more smells inside than out, and, once in, he frequents the kitchen because there are more smells there than in the parlor.

Frogs Vie with Singers.

Theatrical companies playing in the Auditorium this spring are having serious competition from a large colony of bullfrogs that has made its home directly under the building.

Raising Wild Ducks in Maryland.

Passengers on an Annapolis car the other morning were much edified to see S. E. Egerton, Jr. (who has a country place on the Severn), with a market basket containing twenty little blackhead wild ducks.

The Moon on Fish.

A recent report of the Scotch fishery board mentioned a curious habit which, according to fishermen, is ascribed to fish; the phases of the moon.
