ANOTHER DIES OF LOCKJAW

HELEN, EIGHT YEAR OLD DAUGHTER OF MR. AND MRS. N. BEAUDETTE, DIED THIS MORNING

SERUM FAILS TO SAVE LIFE

Second Victim of Dread Tetanus in Three Days—Stepped on Nail Last Monday

Tetanus has within three days time claimed two little victims in Escanaba. On Thursday afternoon John D. Howard, two and one-half year old son of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Howard succumbed to the disease after an illness of only a few days and this morning at one o'clock, Helen, the eight year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Baudette of St. Clair street, succumbed to the same disease.

The death of the child came as a great surprise and shock. On Monday she stepped on a nail which penetrated but a short distance into her foot. The wound healed but on Thursday evening she grew feverish and yesterday morning it was determined that she was suffering from lockjaw. The tetanus serum sent here from Chicago for the use of physicians, who were battling to save the life of the Howard child, was made use of and it was thought for a time that the child's life had been saved. Late last night, however, she began to sink and death claimed her at one o'clock this morning.

The child was an exceptionally bright and lovable one and her sudden death has nearly prostrated her parents.

The body will be shipped to Nadeau this evening and burial will be made there Sunday afternoon. Father Spurline will officiate.

The child is survived by her parents, four brothers and four sisters.

GREAT DEMAND FOR FAIR PREMIUM LISTS

May be Secured by Informing Secretary Peterson—Show Cases for Fancy Work

Inquiries are being received from all quarters concerning the Northern Michigan State Fair premium list. The secretary did not have the names of many people in the county and of course many were missed. And one wishing the premium list should notify Secretary Peterson by mail or call at the Bloomstrom and Peterson store.

The committee in charge of exhibits has secured a number of show cases that will be used for the display of the most valuable fancy work pieces. Those owning exceptionally valuable pieces of work need not fear offering them for exhibition.

The electricians have practically completed their work of wiring the exhibition building and exhibitors who wish to work evening in decorating their booths may begin Monday evening. A man will be in charge.

A telephone has been installed in the exhibition building. The number is 874.

PROVIDING FOR THE HOMELESS

GOVERNOR HAYS PERSONALLY SUPERVISES THE FIRESWEPT SECTION AT HOT SPRINGS

BUSINESS CENTER OF CITY SAVED

Monetary Loss is Estimated Several Million Dollars—Police Patrol The Ruins

(By Associated Press.) Hot Springs, Ark., September 6.—Under the personal direction of Governor Hays the task of providing for those made homeless by last night's fire began at daylight this morning. Hundreds of volunteer workmen are working to prevent the ruins from falling into flames. The saloons are closed and no disorder has made itself evident. The police are patrolling the fire swept area.

The monetary loss is indefinite but is estimated at several millions of dollars.

The fire originated within several blocks of the United States army and navy hospital and took a southeast course. Frail, wooden structures in the negro district, about where the fire started, made more than ordinarily inflammable by an extended drought, burned like tinder. Driven by a high wind, the fire spread rapidly.

Beyond Control in Few Minutes. Within fifteen minutes it was apparent that the fire fighting force of Hot Springs was inadequate and an appeal was made to Little Rock for aid. Apparatus and men were sent but the fire was then beyond control. Dynamite was resorted to when it was apparent that water would be of no avail but this also failed to check the progress of the flames.

The burned area for some distance skirts the business district, and several times the shifting winds headed the fire for the principal business locality, but each time the free use of explosives and an opportune change in the wind saved it.

Before nightfall the task of checking the flames was abandoned and the combined fire fighting forces turned their efforts toward keeping the fire away from the center of the city. This much was accomplished.

The city at midnight was in darkness, except for the glow of the dying fire, which cast shadows over a scene of desolation.

Twenty-five hundred people are homeless in the city. Two companies of militia are present, the electric lights are out and the newspapers are not publishing.

ORE TRAFFIC SHOWS FALL

LABOR TROUBLE DECREASE THE TOTAL BUT ESCANABA DOCKS SHOW A BIG GAIN

TOTAL EXCEEDS THAT OF 1912

Total For August is Slightly Less Than for July at all Lake Ports

Labor troubles at the head of the lakes account for a decrease of 526,815 tons in the ore movement for August compared with that for July. For the season to Sept. 1, however, the movement was 2,955,920 tons in excess of the shipments to a similar date last year, so there is reason to expect that the total movement for 1912 will be exceeded when the last boat goes down the lakes this fall and that the aggregate tonnage shipped will reach, if not somewhat exceed 50,000,000.

The August movement was 7,677,601 tons. During the month the largest fall-off in shipments occurred at the Superior docks, where 904,479 tons less were shipped than in the previous month. The Superior docks were principally affected by the strike growing out of the death of a number of dockworkers killed in a railroad accident, and which resulted in an unsuccessful attempt of the I. W. W. to organize the dock workers. The largest increase in the July shipments is credited to the D. M. & N. (Continued on Page 2.)

ASSASSIN'S VICTIM DEAD

MORTIARO ABE, DIRECTOR OF JAPANESE POLITICAL BUREAU SUCCUMBS TO HIS WOUND

NUMEROUS ARRESTS ARE MADE

Student Element is Blamed for Murder—Some Think he Was Mistaken for Dr. Sun Yat Sen

(By Associated Press.) Tokio, Japan, September 6.—Mortiaro Abe, director of the political bureau of the Japanese foreign office, is dead, the victim of unknown assassins. While in the street yesterday he was set upon and attacked with a knife. He was stabbed in the abdomen and before bystanders could interfere the assassin made his escape.

It was not believed at first that the wound was serious but during the night it became evident that a bowel had been severed and death came quickly. It is believed that some one of the student element is the culprit. Another theory is that the victim was mistaken for Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the Chinese revolutionary whom he resembled. The police have made a number of arrests but admit themselves completely at sea as to the identity of the assassin.

FRUIT EXPERT VISITS THE U.P.

O. K. WHITE, OF MICHIGAN AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE SEES GREAT POSSIBILITIES FOR FRUIT GROWERS.

"FIRE BLIGHT" KILLING TREES

Believes Upper Peninsula is Especially Adapted to the Growing of Strawberries.

O. K. White, field agent of the horticultural department of the Michigan Agricultural college, recently completed an inspection of the various orchards in the Upper Peninsula with a view to determining what varieties of fruit are best adapted to this section.

In a letter to The Mirror, he says: "Upon the request of a number of the people of the Northern Peninsula, among whom were several influential members of the Development Bureau, I made a trip through the peninsula the week of August 17th to 23rd, in the interests of the fruit growers to ascertain what was troubling their trees and to advise them in the care of their orchards and in regard to the best varieties for that region. I am enclosing a brief of my conclusions in that respect and offer it to you for publication.

"I am field agent of the Horticultural department of the Michigan College and have been for four and one-half years and during that time, I have traveled for nearly nine months of each year, visiting the orchards of every part of the southern peninsula. During that time, I have been giving orchard demonstration in the care of orchards, including spraying, pruning, thinning, cover crops, grading and packing and in the identification of insects and diseases. I have also a half interest in a twenty-acre fruit farm in Oceana county, Michigan. The fruit farm has contributed to the county exhibits; took first prize at the State Fair for ten years in succession until 1912.

"In all probability, the Upper Peninsula of Michigan will never become a noted fruit growing section, especially (Continued on page 3.)

CORN COB PIPES FREE THIS WEEK

Local Tobacco Dealers Make Valuable Gifts to Customers

For the next few days, tobacco dealers will give, to every purchaser of a 5c package of Peerless Long Cut Tobacco, one of the well-known "Missouri Meerschaum" corn cob pipes.

Thus insuring the sweetest smoke of any pipe in the world. The famous imported German Weichsel Wood is used for the stem, Escanaba and Gladstone dealers say their limited supply of Pipes is going fast and advise their patrons to act promptly in order to secure one.

The manufacturers of Peerless Tobacco seem quite willing to make wide distribution of gifts as valuable as these pipes to secure the wide trial they desire for this brand. They say that once called to a smoker's attention, the use of Peerless is continued because of its extraordinary quality and full weight of tobacco. It is made of the highest quality tobacco, which can be both smoked and chewed, and is said by experienced smokers to be unequalled for the satisfaction it gives either way.

JEROME HAS JUMPED BAIL

FAILS TO PUT IN HIS APPEARANCE AT PRELIMINARY HEARING BEFORE JUSTICE

THAW'S LAWYERS ASK FOR BAIL

Justice Refuses to Declare Bail Forfeited and Postpones Hearing Until Sept. 11.

(By Associated Press.) Coaticook, Can., September 6.—Jerome was scored bitterly by Justice of the Peace McKee this morning when he failed to appear to answer a charge of gambling. The gray bearded magistrate banged his desk with his fist and said he intended to prosecute Jerome to the full extent of the law. "This may be a suburb town" he exclaimed "but we mete out justice."

He refused to order Jerome's bail forfeit and postponed the hearing until September 11. The crowd stamped its feet during the tirade and applauded its conclusion.

Crown Prosecutor Nicoll appeared for Jerome and said his arrest was an outrage. The feeling against Jerome, who is at Norton Mills, Vermont, is high.

The Roseau hotel keeper, who went to Jerome's bond, said that Thaw wanted to be Jerome's bondsman.

Montreal—The application for bail will be the next move of Thaw's lawyers. The new habeas corpus writ is returnable on September 15 when it is believed a long fight will be started. Both sides are confident.

MUST RETURN EXHIBITS WITHIN TEN DAYS TIME

Those Who Would Benefit Through One Way Freightage Arrangement Can't Delay

The special arrangement with the North Western, E. & L. S. and Soo line railroads, made by the directors of the Northern Michigan State fair, whereby the exhibitors shall pay freightage but one way on articles exhibited at the fair will doubtless serve to greatly increase the number of exhibits and exhibitors.

There are of course restrictions to the arrangement, among the most important of which is the fact that the article or articles exhibited must be returned to the shipping point within ten days of the date of shipment to benefit by the one way freightage ruling.

Manufacturers exhibiting for advertising purposes, will not benefit by the ruling. Horses are not included in the special arrangement and articles that change hands after the date of first shipment will of course be charged for on both way freightage.

C. E. Snyder is looking for the "phantom" boat that all but sent his boat to the bottom last night in Little Bay de Noc.

The offending launch backed away, turned tail and again disappeared in the darkness.

Mr. Snyder is intent upon finding the offender. Inasmuch as the boat was running without lights he is intent upon reporting the mishap to the district inspector.

Boats Lose Time at Docks
 The lake fleet is now congested at each end of the route, with the result that docks are busy and cargoes are far from sufficient to go around. Coal is so tight that small boats that would go to Lake Michigan cannot find cargoes. A small ship that would take a coal cargo for either Lake Michigan or Lake Superior has been sent up light. There is practically no coal at the lake front.

Vessels are waiting at the head of the lakes for their owners to give orders to load, but ore shippers are not yet in position to furnish cargoes for all.

VAUNEE DANCE HALL FURNISHES TRAGEDY

Results in Death of Joseph Lemay, Who Expires From Blood Poisoning

vaunee dance hall, Sept. 4.—Another tragedy has been added to the list of misdeeds in the town of Lincoln in Newau-County, the result of a dance hall

Joseph Lemay is dead from injuries sustained at the hands of Joseph Devillers, having expired on Sunday from blood poisoning from the effects of being bitten by his antago-

What can be gathered of the tragedy was a dance at the old place some time ago at which a number of Devillers got into trouble with several of the young men in attendance, the fight starting over a matter. He told his father that his assailants were named Joe Lemay. The elder Devillers became highly incensed by the affair and on Sunday, August 17th, he spied young Lemay coming from church with his wife, and he held a small child in his arms at the time stopped him and started a fight. The story goes that he passed the child to his wife, who attempted to protect herself from the assault. Devillers got the better of the younger man in his fight and began to chew it, it being the greatest difficulty that he had to let go, so wrought up he neglected to have the injured man taken to a physician for several days, during which time blood poisoning developed. He went to a physician at Keeweenaw, who dressed the wound and sent the man home. A week before he died, he suffered from agonies, the arm swelling to a size which rendered it useless. Sunday night death relieved him of his suffering.

The dead man was only about 23 years of age and leaves a wife and two children. The man who is the cause of the tragedy is about 50 years old. He was arrested and placed under $10,000 bail to appear for trial.

Devillers claimed that he had nothing to do with the trouble with Joseph Lemay at the dance hall and that there was no reason for the assault.

A neighborhood in the vicinity is brought up over the affair and the ending. It was at the same time that a shooting scrape occurred last year.

related to tree fruits because of the low temperatures are so low that many varieties are unable to stand them, unless very hardy. Some can be discovered or developed which is quite unlikely. Most valuable varieties will be unobtainable. Of those varieties of which I saw growing and which I thought to be most valuable and suitable, there are the Yellow Kent, Duchess, Wealthy, Peckham, Lowland Raspberry, Wolf River and Alexander undoubtedly will be inasmuch as the market discriminating against them more each year on account of inferior quality, it is considered to plant them in commercial quantities. Fameuse and McIntosh will most likely stand the winter temperature and are the most valuable varieties provided they are able to keep the scab in check. Many varieties of crabapples do well but Hyslop is the only one that finds a ready sale in any quantity. Of the varieties of plums doing well, there were the Burbank and Burbank, two Japanese varieties that are very heavy. The market for plums is a fluctuating one and consequently growing has never been very profitable in any fruit producing section. cherries are apparently doing well and of the numerous varieties that are grown, Early Richmond and Montmency are the two most valuable.

For saw strawberries make a good crop on vines as I saw in several places in the Northern Peninsula. The strawberry varies greatly in its ability to different conditions, and for anyone to recommend

It seems to me that there is a need for a considerable larger acreage to be devoted to fruit growing in the markets of the Upper Peninsula. The fruit growers ought to be supplied to a greater extent than those which are most abundant. It must be remembered that the people of the Upper Peninsula must be just as careful, if not more so, in the selection of the sites for their orchards as the people of the Lower Peninsula or other states. Among these considerations should be the selection of an elevated site which offers good air and surface drainage in preference to low lands where cold air always set-ties and does more damage. "Many of the trees that I saw that were unhealthy showed evidence of severe winter injury in 1912. In most instances, these trees were partially or wholly dead; some showed indications of health a year ago by small and tardy leaving. "There is one disease that I found to be most prevalent among the apple and pear trees that the growers need to be most concerned about and that is the Fire Blight. This causes the trees or parts of them to have the appearance of being burned. It is a bacterial disease that works beneath the bark and can only be controlled by cutting out the affected parts immediately upon its appearance. Every day they are left, the disease continues to spread. As an extra precaution to prevent the spread of the disease, it is considered necessary to disinfect the tools and the wounds after each cut is made. This disease has done thousands of dollars worth of damage to many trees in the state during the past few years and it would seem as though it would make pear growing a very hazardous business except in the hands of the most expert fruit growers. This also holds true with many of the varieties of apples which seem to do especially well in the Upper Peninsula.

PROLOGUE.

Here's a tale of the sea and the treasure isle, of long hid gems and bad men's guile, of perils on land and wave well met, 'spite storm and mutiny's awful threat.

The way of a man with a maid is told as they voyage the seas in quest of gold—the man so brave and the maid so fair. For her sake naught he will not dare.

From English fields to south sea shore their path they follow while billows roar, but it leads them safe to their goal at last, with their love and their treasure tightly clasped.

CHAPTER I.

Wherein I Bait the Duke Over the Dead.

I CANNOT say that I was greatly surprised when I stumbled across the body of Sir Geoffrey in the spinney, which is not for a moment meant to convey the impression that I was not shocked. I had expected that Sir Geoffrey would come to some such sad end; therefore I say that I was not surprised. But as I stood over him in the gray dawn, looking down upon him lying so quietly on his back with the handsome, silver mounted, ivory handled dueling pistol which had done the damage still clasped in his right hand I was fascinated with horror.

Sir Geoffrey had carefully put his bullet through his heart. It was less disfiguring and brutal, less hard on those left behind, less troublesome, more gentlemanly. His sword lay underneath him, the diamond hilt protruding. I guessed that he was glad enough, after all, that the end had come, for there was not that look of pain or horror or fear which I have so often seen on the faces of the dead, but his features were calm and composed. He had not been dead long. As I bent over him I noticed that he had something in his left hand. A nearer look showed it to be an envelope. I drew it away and saw that it was addressed to Mistress Lucy. Thrusting it in the pocket of my coat, I rose to my feet.

At that instant I heard steps and voices. Now I had nothing on earth to fear from anybody. The death of Sir Geoffrey was too obviously a suicide for any one to accuse me even if there had been any reason on earth for bringing me under suspicion. The letter which I carried in my pocket addressed to Mistress Lucy would undoubtedly explain everything there was to explain. Something, however, moved me to seek concealment. I am a sailor, as you will find out, and can act quickly in an emergency by a sort of instinct.

Sir Geoffrey lay on the side of the path through the spinney, and beyond him the coppice thickened. The path twisted and turned. From the sound of the footsteps I judged that men were coming along it. I instantly stepped behind a tree trunk in the leafy foliage of the undergrowth. I could see without being seen and hear as well.

I did not expect that any of the guests of the castle would make their appearance at that hour. The footsteps stopped. Two men, one of whom had been pointed out to me as Baron Luftdon, in the lead, followed by another who was a stranger to me, suddenly appeared. A voice which I recognized as Luftdon's at once exclaimed in a awestruck tones:

"By gad, he's done it! Here's a pretty affair!"

"Oh, I don't know," said the second; "it might be worse?"

"Worse for him? Great heavens, man, he's dead!"

"Worse for us?"

"What d'ye mean? I don't understand."

ing high carouse with Sir Geoffrey for the past week at the castle, bent over him.

"Well," continued the drawler nonchalantly—as for me, I hated them both, but the latter speaker the more, if possible, for reasons which you will presently understand—"this relieves me greatly."

"What do you mean? After such a night as we had to come upon—this is enough to unsettle any man."

"Pooh, pooh, man; you're nervous!"

"Well, I don't know how it relieves you. And after all's said and done, Wilberforce was a gentleman, a good player and a gallant loser."

"Exactly, and he lost his all like a gentleman."

"And you got it, at least most of it."

"Patience, my friend; you had your share."

"I don't know but I would give it back to have poor old Geoff with us once again," said Luftdon, with some heat.

"That is a perfectly foolish statement, my buck," returned the other. "Somebody was bound to get it. Wilberforce has been going the pace for years. We happened to be in at the death, that's all."

"Well, how does it relieve you, then? Do you think Wilberforce would have attempted to get you to support him?"

The drawler laughed. "Of course not. This—his proof enough of the spirit that was in him. But, of course, I cannot marry the girl now."

"Certainly not. Her father a bankrupt, a suicide!"

"But the castle and this park?"

"Mortgaged up to the hilt. Speaking of hilt's—he stooped down and, faintly avoiding contact with the corpse, drew from the scabbard the diamond hilted sword—"this belongs to me. It's worth taking. You remember he stalked it last night on the last deal."

"Good God, man," protested the first speaker, "don't take the man's sword away! Let him lie with his weapons like a gentleman."

"Tut, tut! You grow scrupulous, it seems. We will provide a cheaper badge of his knighthood, if necessary."

"And about the girl?"

"'Tis all off."

"You will have some trouble breaking your engagement with her. I am thinking."

"Not I. To do her justice, the girl has the spirit of her father. A whisp'er that I am disinclined to the match will be sufficient."

"Aye, but who will give her that whisp'er?"

"We will arrange that some way. Truth to tell, I am rather tired of the mix. She bores me with her high airs. She does not know that she is penniless and disgraced. And as for her good looks, 'tis a country beauty, after all."

"Poor girl!" began Luftdon, whose face, though bloated and flushed, still showed some signs of human kindness.

At that point I intervened. I could bear no more. When they spoke so slightly of my mistress it was more than I could stand. I burst out of the brush and stood before them—mad, enraged all through. I will admit that I lacked the composure and breeding of these precious two. They started back at my sudden appearance, from which he of the slow speech speedily recovered.

"Now, who may you be, and what may you want?" he said.

"Who I am matters nothing," said I, "but what I want matters a great deal."

"Ah! And what is it that you want that matters so?"

"In the first place that sword."

"This!" said the man, holding Sir Geoffrey's handsome weapon up lightly by the blade.

"That," said I.

I am accustomed to move quickly as well as to think quickly, and before he knew it I had it by the hilt, and but that he released the blade instantly I would have cut his hand as I withdrew it. He swung round and clapped his hand on his own sword, a fierce oath breaking from his lips, his face black as thunder. "Don't draw that little spit," I said, "or I will be under the necessity of breaking your back."

I towered above both of them, and I have no doubt that I could have made good my boast. The man had the courage of his race and station. He faced me undaunted, his hand on his sword hilt.

"Would you rob me of mine own?" he asked calmly.

"I might do so, and with justice," I replied. "You had no hesitation in robbing the living or the dead."

"Zounds!" cried the first man, "it was in fair play; we risked each what we had, and Sir Geoffrey lost."

"Yes; I see," I replied. "Having paid with everything else, he had to throw away his life. I heard what you said. You wonder how Mistress Wilberforce is to learn the situation. You wonder who is to tell her. I will."

"That is good; well thought of," said the drawler with amazing assurance. "I could not have wished it better. You are doubtless some servant of the house—"

"I am no man's servant," I interrupted in some heat.

"Somebody born on the place who probably cherishes a yokel's humble admiration for the lady of the manor."

I flushed like a girl at this. I never was good at the dissimulation that goes on in polite society.

"Tell her, my man, tell her," he cried, "tell her that she is a beggar and her father a suicide and that I have all her property without her. She can go to your arms. She is not meet for the Duke of Arcester."

So this was Arcester! I had heard of him, as I had of Luftdon, two of the most debauched, unprincipled rakes, idlers, fortune hunters, gamblers, men about town, in all England. I stepped closer to him and struck him with the palm of my hand. His sword was out on the moment, but before he could make a pass I wrenched it from him, broke the blade over my knee and hurled the two pieces into the coppice.

"I can match you with swords," said I. "I have fought with men, not popinjays in my day all over the world, and I know the use of the weapon, but I would not demean myself, being an honest man though no gentleman, by crossing blades with such a ruffian."

"By God," cried the man, "I will have you swung into the mill pond. I will clap you in jail. I will—"

"You will do nothing of the sort," said I. "There is no man on the estate who would not take my part against yours, especially when I repeat what you have said about Mistress Lucy."

"And who would believe you?" queried the duke, whose anger was at a frightful height in being thus braved and insulted. In his agitation he tore at his neck cloth. "I would be your word against mine, and—"

"For the matter of that, my word will not be uncorroborated," I interrupted swiftly.

"What do you mean?"

"This gentleman—"

"By gad," said Lord Luftdon, "you are right to appeal to me and you were right to strike Arcester. I'm sorry for the girl and for Sir Geoffrey and ashamed for my friend."

"Would you turn against me in this?" cried the duke.

"I certainly would."

"God," whispered his grace hotly, fumbling at the empty sheath, "I wish I had my sword!"

"There is Sir Geoffrey's sword," said Lord Luftdon, who did not lack courage, clutching his own blade as he spoke and making as if to draw it.

"No," said I, master of the situation as I meant to be, "there will be no more fighting over the dead body of Sir Geoffrey. You and Lord Luftdon can settle your differences elsewhere."

"On second thought, there will be no further settlement," said Luftdon, regaining his coolness and thrusting back into its scabbard his half drawn blade. "His grace and I are in too many things to make a permanent difference between us possible."

"I thought so," I replied.

"By gad," laughed Luftdon, "I like your spirit, lad! Who are you and what are you?"

"The late gardener's son."

"Do they breed such as you down here in these gardens?"

"As to that I know not, my lord. I am a sailor. I have commanded my own ship and made my own fortune."

I come back here between cruises because I am devoted to—"

"The woman!" sneered the duke. And I marveled at the temerity of the man, seeing that I could have choked him to death with one hand.

"Mention her name again," I cried, "and you will lie beside your victim yonder!"

"Right!" said Luftdon approvingly. "I come back here because I am fond of the old place; it is my home. My people have served the Wilberforces for generations. Their forbears and mine lie together in the churchyard around the hill yonder. You can't understand devotion like that," said I, turning to the duke, "and if it is not necessary that you should—"

"And indeed what is necessary for me, pray?" he sneered.

"That you leave the place at once."

"Without speech with my lady?"

"Without speech with any one. There is a good inn at the village. I will take it upon myself to see that your servants pack your mails and follow you there at once."

"I will not be ordered about like this!" protested the duke.

"Oh, yes, you will," said Luftdon. "The advice he gives is good. We have nothing more to do here. Don't be a fool, Arcester. You have got everything you wanted in this game, and it is only just that you should pay a little for it. What's your name, my man?"

"Never mind what it is."

"Are you ashamed of it?"

"Hampdon!"

"Hampdon, you may not be a gentleman," said Luftdon, "but by gad you are a man, and here is my hand on it!"

He had played a man's part so I clasped it.

And so they went down the path, leaving me not greatly relishing my triumph, for I had to tell Mistress Lucy all that had happened.

The scarlet of my lady's riding coat as she galloped up the tree covered road attracted my attention. I quickened my pace, and we arrived at the steps of the hall at the same instant. She was alone, for she had evidently chosen to ride unaccompanied.

I stood silent before her with that curious dumbness I generally experience when first entering her presence, while she drew rein sharply. She was a little thing compared to me—indeed, small compared even to the average woman, but in one sense she was the biggest thing I had ever confronted. I was almost afraid of her! I who feared nothing else. What she thought of me was of little moment to her.

It was Mistress Lucy's regular habit to take a morning gallop every day. It was that usual custom that caused her to look so fresh and young and beautiful, that put the color in her cheek and the sparkle in her eye.

She nodded carelessly, yet kindly, to me. It was her habit, that careless kindness. When she was a little girl and I had been a great boy we had played together familiarly, but that was long since over. Then she looked about for a groom. The steps that led to the terrace were deserted. Sir Geoffrey of late had grown slack in the administration of affairs on account of his troubles, and no one was present. Mistress Lucy stared at me, frowning.

WOOD'S INJURY PUTS BOSTON FAR DOWN

John McGraw Had It All Doped Out But He Must Have Been Looking at the Stars.

John McGraw earned himself a home as a prophet by predicting early in the season that the Red Sox would be "the most quickly forgotten world's champion team in history." But John was just hazarding a little guess when he pulled the prediction.

In order for McGraw to have foreseen the collapse of the Red Sox, he must have had a foreknowledge of the injury that has kept down Joe Wood, and of the failure of Pitcher Buck O'Brien—two important cogs in the winning of the 1912 American league title. Unless he is a crystal gazer or a clairvoyant, then McGraw must have forecast the downfall of the McAleerites.

As a matter of fact there is nothing particularly the matter with the Red Sox now. They are probably just as much a world's championship outfit as ever, minus the confidence that goes with success, and—now right here is the gist of the whole thing—Joseph Wood.

The injury to Wood cost the Red Sox a first-class chance at the pennant. With Wood performing up to the top notch of last season, the team would be out in front of the Athletics by several games. Wood at this time last season, had won about 29 games and lost three.

With pitching equal to that of 1912, the Red Sox would now be giving the Athletics the scare of their lives.

Wonder if J. J. McGraw ever stopped to figure the record of that remark about the Boston Red Sox being the "worst ever," etc. If the Red Sox were such a weakling outfit, the Giants must have been still worse, to have succumbed in the world's series.

In fact, the Giants, in the world's series of last year, everlastingly disgraced themselves by wasting some of the most brilliant pitching ever served up for any team. Any club that couldn't win behind the work of Mathewson in his three efforts of last year, doesn't deserve to play in a world's series.

The showing of the club in that test is doing much to give the followers of the Athletics encouragement, even though the work of the main reliance pitchers of the White Elephants has appeared to fall away in the last month.

That the Giants' defense will crack under pressure seems to be the prevailing opinion among those who followed closely the work of the club during the big games.

TIGERS SEEKING A FIRST BASEMAN

Hughie Jennings Has Tried Out Nine On First Corner.

Hughie Jennings is gunning for the firstbaseman record set by the Browns a record which the St. Louis club is still piling up. In filling the firstbase job, the Browns, since 1911, have used 20 men, including Covington, the latest recruit. Beginning with Del Gainer and Ness in that same year, the Tigers have had only nine men on the job, but it is only recently that Hughie has really gone out in for the mark.

Those who have enjoyed momentary or longer, at the first—besides the two mentioned, Jim Delahanty, George Moriarty, Onslow, Walter Pipp, Samford, Henri Rondeau and Tutty Besides first sacker who had a at the job, the Tigers own Bu

Stovall hurt his hands and have help, so Bundy Brief was ported. When he went to City in the trade for Walker, ton was brought in and just the latest of the St. Louis first men. But others may come as Jennings hustle for the record

WHY NOT TAKE FRANCHISE IN PACIFIC COAST LEAGUE

Morning Press Suggests Escanaba Rockford's Place in the W. & I. League

The subject of Escanaba over the franchise of the Rockford, Illinois, baseball team and the season as a member of the consilium league was brought in the Morning Press today.

Rockford is far removed from remaining teams of the W. league and that is precisely why the baseball booster are contemplating dropping the franchise. Practically every team circuit, with the possible exception of Appleton is losing money. Rockford drops out you may think a long time before ceasing Escanaba.

The season is too far advanced for Escanaba to take a franchise league at this time and one so far removed as the V. circuit.

Baseball in Escanaba is dead for the season. It will try to revive the sport spring.

THE ORPHEUM.
 This theatre had a capacity house at the opening of the second half of this week and the audience was rewarded by a first class bill of vaudeville features. Nobel and Noel as impersonators of the female characters, are stars in their line of singing and dancing. The song, "When I Dream of Erin," by Nobel and the dance, "Sailor's Hornpipe," by Noel, were features. Fred Irkwin as a monologist is unexcelled. In his monologue there was not a chestnut from start to finish and his songs were also good. The Foster Sisters, Grace and Phyllis, sou-brettes, wound up the bill with some excellent eccentric singing and dancing. The moving pictures as usual were up to the standard.

"LESS WOMEN WEAR HEALTHIER THEY'LL BE"

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sept. 6.—Dishonourous gowns, slit skirts, peekaboo waists and kindred clothing of the new styles are all right if taken in moderation, at the right time and in the right place, according to Dr. Ell G. Jones, of Burlington, N. J., president of the American Association of Progressive Medicine, who is in Poughkeepsie this week presiding over the annual convention of that body.

"I have come to believe," stated Dr. Jones, "that the less clothing we drape on the figures in the heated weather, the more we increase the chances of prolonging our lives."

"I have records which show that the percentage of illness among women who wear little clothing is much lower than those who put on too many garments and I do not refer to the Zulus, nor Fiji Islanders either, but get my statistics right here in the riddy whirl."

"I agree with the furists that we are returning to an age which shall disregard dress, although I do not predict the adoption of the fig leaf by any means."

"Some day a rising modiste, the genius of his age, will invent a style which will omit the transparency but will supply its airiness and women will adopt garment more eagerly than they have the present style."

SPEAKING TO UNKNOWN WOMEN PROVES COSTLY

Chief of Police Nabs J. Tankus for Addressing Women on the Street

It cost J. Tankus $9.25 to speak to a young lady whom he didn't know and who had no desire for his acquaintance.

About seven o'clock last evening a woman informed Chief Iverson that she had been stopped on the street by a man and insulted. The man she described and the chief went hunting. Soon he located the man he was looking for and a little watching developed the fact that he was addressing practically every woman who passed him. The chief promptly nabbed him and when he was arraigned before Judge McEwen this morning he was assessed $5 and costs. He paid up.

The Bank of Japan is capitalized at $1,000,000,000. Its deposits exceed $200,000,000. It issues all the notes of the country and thus controls the currency situation. Besides the bank of Japan there are other semi-official banks filling various special functions for the government.

South Range Eviction.

Reports from the Copper Range Consolidated properties on the South range are that the strikers who have received notices to go back to work or vacate the company houses look upon the matter as a joke. None of the other companies have taken this eviction step as yet.

BEST LAND AT OUR OWN DOOR

Every Essential Point for Fruit Raising is Right Here in Michigan.

The following relative to the growing of fruits in Michigan is sent out from Lansing:

Why will Michigan people leave their own state to buy high priced lands and pay high irrigation rates when they have the opportunity right under their noses to buy at a low rate the finest fruit lands in the world?"

This was one of the state's conundrums set forth by Professor H. Eustace, head of the department of horticulture, M. A. C., in discussing the fruit crop outlook in northern Michigan from which section he has just returned after inspecting a number of the various orchards in the northwestern fruit country.

According to Professor Eustace there will be a fine crop of summer and fall apples and an exceptional crop of winter fruit. Peaches he says are looking fine and the Grand Traverse sections and the fruit country north of Grand Rapids had no killing frosts that affected the fruit crop and have been liberally watered during the growing season by refreshing rains.

"Ohio men," he said, "are getting their living from Michigan fruit land. They come to our state in the summer and return in the winter. They have seen the possibilities of profit in Michigan fruit soothg that our own people have not learned although we are right on the ground.

"No apples grown anywhere in the world have the flavor of Michigan apples. Western fruit is raised at a big expense and the major portion of it shipped east. We have the ideal climate for fruit and can raise it cheaply because we are nearer the eastern markets. Every essential point in fruit raising is right at our own door
