BRYAN WOULD NOT STAND IN WAY OF WILSON'S POLICIES; DISAGREE ON GERMAN NOTE

UTMOST GOODWILL APPARENT BETWEEN PRESIDENT WILSON AND FORMER SECRETARY W. J. BRYAN—TEARS IN EYES OF SECRETARY WHEN LEFT HIS OFFICE WITH MRS. BRYAN TO DAY—WILL USE HIS INFLUENCE AS A CITIZEN TO FURTHER IDEAS OF PEACE WHICH CAUSED CONFLICT WITH WILSON ON GERMAN POLICY

ROBERT LANSING ACTING HEAD OF STATE DEPT.

BRYAN'S NOTE OF RESIGNATION

"My Dear Mr. President:

"It is with sincere regret that I have reached the conclusion that I should return to you the commission of secretary of state with which you honored me at the beginning of your administration. . . .

"Obedient to your sense of duty and actuated by the highest motives you have prepared, for transmission to the German government a note in which I cannot join without violating what I deem to be an obligation to my country and the issue involved is of such moment that to remain a member of the cabinet would be as unfair to you as it would be to the cause which is nearest my heart, namely the prevention of war.

"I therefore, respectfully tender my resignation to take effect when the note is sent, unless you prefer an earlier hour. Alike desirous of reaching a peaceful solution of the problems arising out of the use of submarines against merchantmen we find ourselves differing irreconcilably as to the methods which should be employed. It falls to your lot to speak officially for the nation. I consider it to be none the less my duty to endeavor, as a private citizen, to promote the end which you have in view by means which you do not feel at liberty to use.

"In severing the intimate and pleasant relations which had existed between us during the last two years, permit me to acknowledge the profound satisfaction which it has given me to be associated with you in the important work which has come before the state department and to thank you for the courtesies extended.

"With the heartiest good wishes for your personal welfare and for the success of your administration, I am, my dear Mr. President,

"Very truly yours,
(Signed.) "W. J. BRYAN."

Washington, June 9.—Counselor Robert Lansing today received the official appointment as secretary of state, ad interim.

Washington, June 9.—Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan, three times candidate for president on the Democratic ticket of the nation formally left his office this morning and Counselor Robert E. Lansing appointed to the position, ad interim.

The change in the cabinet came at a critical moment on taking place with the despatching of the American note to Germany.

"Differing not in the objects sought, but in the policy expressed," said Bryan, he resigned rather than add his name to the American note.

Affection Unchanged

Bryan told friends today that his affection for President Wilson was unchanged, and that he knew the president's attitude towards him was affection unchanged.

Berlin, June 9.—Stanislaw was captured today by the Austrians, according to a German Army headquarters statement issued this afternoon. Stanislaw is seventy-five miles south of Lemberg, important Galician city now in the hands of the Russians.

London, June 9.—From Caporetto to the Gulf of Trieste the forces of Italy are consolidating today on the banks of the Isonzo River and within a week or at the most, ten days, the first serious encounter of the present advance of the Italians onto Austrian territory should be fought.

Now that the Italians no longer command the banks of the Isonzo, but have thrown troops across the river to the east, a conflict with first rate military tactics it is inevitable that the Austrians will attack them, say British experts.

In the east the Russians are desperately trying to stem the tide of the Austrian advance on Lemberg.

In the west slow but steady gains by the French continue to dominate the situation.

News of the resignation of Secretary Bryan came too late for the morning papers to comment upon it editorially, but large space was given to it this afternoon.

GERMAN RESOURCES IN AGRICULTURAL LINES CAREFULLY CONSERVED

(By Associated Press.)

Berlin, June 9.—The state's supervision of the agricultural resources of the country has been brought to a high state of perfection during the past few months. Questions of credits, supplies, labor, and marketing, have all received attention. In fact, every effort has been made to adapt the country to the new conditions.

Much effort was needed to transform the organization of credit which so powerfully supports German agrarian interests, in accordance with the requirements of war.

One of the acute difficulties was the supply of artificial fertilizers, since the importation of nitrates and guano had ceased. The problem has been in general solved by the use of products in which use is made of the store of nitrogen in the air. In this, as in other respects, Germany hopes in the future to be self-supporting.

The German farmers' supply association, originally an agency for the purchase and distribution of a special manure, has now, at the request of the imperial government, become the central organization for the whole supply and distribution of cattle foods and fertilizers. It has also taken over the fadders and fertilizers which were seized and sent to Germany from the occupied districts of Belgium, France and Poland.

The labor difficulty was also a serious problem. A special organization was formed to supply labor saving agricultural machinery to farmers, and it is stated that 200,000 laborers are to be brought from the devastated districts of Poland. Prisoners of war will also be used; there are over a million prisoners in the various camps of Germany and Austria, and more and more of them are being used as farm laborers. In many places they may be seen in their varied uniforms, at work in the fields. The women, also, have been mobilized for agricultural labor.

All the German cities and towns are turning to account their waste land. Cologne, for example, has made contracts with farmers to sow 1,500 acres with peas for the city, and to cultivate potatoes on every available piece of ground within the city limits.

Eagle Screams at Flat Rock on Fourth of July

BIG CELEBRATION PLANNED FOR NATIONAL HOLIDAY—RACES, PICNIC, SPEECHES, FIRE, AND ALL THE REST OF IT

A celebration that is expected to eclipse that of any previous time in the history of the community is planned for July 5th, at Flat Rock. Under the direction of competent and active hands, the program for the big day is shaping up well at this time and if the proposed features are carried out to a complete materialization residents of the village and vicinity will witness one of the biggest and most complete celebrations ever attempted in this locality. The celebration will take place on Monday, the Fourth falling on Sunday.

Open New Race Course

One of the biggest and most important events of the day will be the inauguration of the new race track at the park with a matinee card of good races. Other events of an athletic nature will also be run off during the afternoon, there being races for children and older persons.

Addresses will be delivered by prominent orators of the locality and a big chicken dinner will be served at noon. As usual with Fourth of July celebrations a magnificent fireworks display will top the event off in a proper manner. Dancing and other amusements will be held at the park.

FRENCH SOCIETY OF CITY TO CELEBRATE; PLAN BIG PROGRAM

BIG PARADE BE STAGED AND EXERCISES HELD AT LUDINGTON PARK—SPEECHES, PICNIC, GENERAL GOOD TIME

ATTEND MORNING MASS AT STE. ANNE

Arrangements for the celebration of June 24, known as St. Jean deBaptiste day have been under way for several days by the committee from the Institut Jacques Cartier, under whose auspices the event will be celebrated and today formal announcement is made of the plans for that day.

French people of the city and vicinity will be given invitations to attend the services at St. Anne's church in the morning, at which mass the Institut members will be present in a body. Following the services there, a big parade will be held, covering the downtown section of the city and winding up at Ludington park where a number of addresses will be heard from local orators. The speakers for the occasion have not as yet been selected but full announcements will be published as soon as the program is gotten into comprehensive shape.

Promises of a big time are made today by the committee which is exceptionally busy in preparation of the event.

Leading the parade during the morning of June 24, will be Hymn's band, instructed to play some of the most stirring and inspiring airs they are capable of.

Picnic in Afternoon

During the noon hour the celebrators will hold a basket picnic. Other diversions are slated to wind up the day's program in a fitting manner. Complete plans will be announced later.

The committee in charge of the arrangements is the president, assisted by Ben Melloche, W. C. LaBelle, Jerry Clouthier, Joseph Goulet and Adelard.

NO TRUTH IN RUMOR

A rumor to the effect that Rev. F. Blinn of St. Anne's church in Passaic, N. J., was being circulated yesterday, is without foundation. While Rev. Blinn has been recently ill for some time his condition is not considered critical at this time.

Yale Graduate in Charge of Public Speaking Department—Fill Grade Vacancies—Name Commissioners

Plans for the coming July school election were completed and the commissioners to handle the election at that time named during a meeting of the school board last evening. The filling of vacancies in the teaching staff, caused by the retirement from local schools of A. B. Willerton, Miss Mary E. Lynch, Miss Genevieve Stowe and Miss Elsa Atkins, who leave at the end of the present school year.

New Instructors

The following are the new teachers engaged for next year's school work here; to fill vacancies:

Mark Bailey, Yale graduate.

Miss Mary Slack, Lawrence and Chicago "U"

Miss Vera B. Haines, Northwestern "U."

Miss Ada M. Schwittay, Lake Forest.

Mr. Bailey will have charge of the public speaking department, while Miss Haines is to take over the duties of girl's physical culture, with Miss Morrell transferred to another department of the schools. Miss Schwittay will teach mathematics and English.

Other vacancies filled was the naming of the Misses Mabel Wall, Nina Germaine, Mae Ford and Ethel Barth to grade schools. The resignation of Miss Helen Woerner has been tendered, she having accepted a position in another city.

Vote on School Building

Escanaba electors will be given an opportunity to pass upon the plan of adding a most necessary adjunct to the present school system in the plan of bonding the city for $30,000 to build a manual training school.

The city will be divided into three voting districts, similar to the plan followed in other schools elections, as follows: first, second and third ward voting place at the city hall; fourth, fifth and sixth ward voting place at Washington school annex, and seventh ward at the North Escanaba Fire station.

Name Commissioners

The following election commissioners were named during last night's session of the board: Isadore Cyr, Peter Groos, and Albert Ellsworth, inspectors for the various precincts are: city hall, Z. Beauchamp; Washington school, George McGuire and at the Fire station, Emery Snyder.

SPECIAL STENOGRAPHER REQUEST FROM LAWYER

The refusal of the city council to grant the request for a special stenographer, to assist Clerk Linden in the preparation and compilation of city ordinances, does not compromise Clerk Linden as the original request for such aid came through the Mayor and city attorney D-tsch, they believing the work required such assistance. It is said that the work of compilation is one of lengthy nature, requiring close application to properly and accurately classify, index and arrange the one hundred or more acts of the council. It is contended the work is not that of the city clerk; like asking the clerk of the state legislature to make a compilation of the Michigan statutes.

LADIES AID TO HOLD PANTRY SALE SATURDAY

Lectures will be given afternoon and evening of each day by noted physicians and health experts, from Ann Arbor, Lansing and other cities. It is planned to have one big open-air meeting in Ludington park, when an outdoor program will be presented, consisting of drills, music and a lecture.

Another feature that interest many is a "Better Babies" contest. The music committee will arrange programs for all meetings and much entertainment as well as instruction will be provided.

In lower Michigan similar meetings were attended by thousands of enthusiastic people. You can help to name the first "Good Health Congress" held in Upper Michigan a rousing success. We expect you to do your share. Be an enthusiast. Boost this very commendable movement to teach the people of Delta County how to "Live Longer and Better."

BERLIN WOMEN SERVE AT CAR MOTORMEN

Berlin, June 9.—Women as motormen on the Berlin street cars. In addition to the hundreds already serving as conductors while their husbands are in the field, are now in prospect. Women also are to replace men at the various railroad stations, where the main duty is to punch the tickets of travelers as they make for their trains, or take them up as they leave the platforms. The latter work is not strenuous and it is believed it can be performed easily by the women.

OFFICER LEADS MEN ARMED WITH A CANE

(By Associated Press.)
Cairo, June 9.—In recent despatches from this place mention was made of the nameless hero Sed-el-Bahr—a certain colonel who, after the difficult landing operations there, and subsequent to the assault, on the fortress, led the men in a gallant bayonet charge up a hill. All he carried was a small cane, but a band he wore on his arm apparently was that of a staff officer. He walked about in the open under a continuous fire, talking to the men, cheering them up and rallying them together. When they were all ready for the bayonet charge he placed himself in front of them all, and armed simply with this small cane, led the charge up the hill. The moral effect of the officer's action was great. The men charged up the hill and cleared their enemy from his position but the unknown officer lost his life. It now transpires that the officer was Major Doughty-Wylie and

FORMER ESCANABAN IS LESSEE FINE HOSTELRY

Alex MacSwan, Formerly at the Delta Has Leased Iowa Hotel For Term of Eight Years

Word has been received here today of the leasing of the Hotel Pattee, at Perry, Iowa, by Alex MacSwan, formerly of this city. Mr. and Mrs. MacSwan left Escanaba several months ago for the west, and have just decided to take up the present venture. The hotel is one of the finest in Iowa, has 75 rooms with every convenience and is beautifully furnished, according to Mr. MacSwan. It is known as "Iowa's most modern fireproof hotel."

The Perry Advertiser, relating the lease says:

Yesterday J. Frank Wray, who has been landlord of the Pattee Hotel since its opening, sold his interest in the business, together with all fixtures of the hotel to Alex MacSwan, formerly connected with the Palmer House, of Chicago. The transfer will be made Tuesday morning, June 1st.

The deal came as a surprise to the friends of Mr. Wray, and was somewhat of a surprise to himself. Mr. MacSwan, together with his wife and Miss Anna Christie, who lives with them have been in the city for several days, and he was pleased with the patronage afforded the hotel and delighted with its appointments.

The Pattee is recognized throughout the hotel world as one of the finest in the state, and there has frequently been hotel men here to see the property. Mr. MacSwan, during his stay in Perry, has been pleased with the city and the people and the general air of prosperity. He has confidence in its future and wishes to be aligned with it.

PROPOSE SICKNESS INSURANCE FOR WORKERS IN THE COUNTRY

Washington, June 9.—The feasibility of a system of sickness insurance for the United States and for states, by which wage earners would be enabled to meet the expenses of ill health and the various health promoting agencies be stimulated in the prevention of disease among industrial workers, has been the subject of investigation by members of the staff of the federal commission on industrial relations and the U. S. public health service, according to an announcement by the bureau of the public health service here.

A system of sickness insurance similar to those in operation in European countries, states the report, is based upon the principle that the insured wage earner, by small weekly payments that are supplemented by proportionate payments from employers and from the government, will be enabled to receive weekly cash benefits and medical and hospital service for himself and his family in times of sickness. Employers, employees, and the public will thus have a definite financial incentive to reduce the amount of sickness, and the preventive agencies now at work will be afforded a field for closer co-operation with industrial and trade union organizations for the purpose of lessening disease.

Under present conditions, it is pointed out, millions of low paid wage workers are unable to meet the expenses of sickness and not only suffer from lack of proper medical care, but are deprived of their income during periods of ill health.

CHAPTER I.

His Britannic Majesty's Service.
"There was a mysterious affair last night, signore."
"Oh!" I exclaimed. "Anything that interests us?"
"Yes, signore," replied the tall, thin Italian consular clerk, speaking with a strong accent. "An English steam yacht ran aground on the Meloria about ten miles out, and was discovered by a fishing boat that brought the news to harbor. The admiral sent out two torpedo boats, which managed after a lot of difficulty to bring in the yacht safely, but the captain of the port has a suspicion that the crew were trying to make away with the vessel."

"To lose her, you mean?"
Francesco nodded.
"Sounds curious," I remarked.
"Since the consul went away on leave things seem to have been humming—two stabbing affrays, eight drunken seamen locked up, a mutiny on a tramp steamer, and now a yacht being cast away—a fairly decent list! And yet some stay-at-home people complain that British consuls are only paid to be ornamental! They should spend a week here, at Leghorn, and they'd soon alter their opinion."

"Yes, they would, signore," responded the thin-lipped old fellow with a grin, as he twisted his fierce gray mustache. Francesco Carducci was a well-known character in Leghorn. An honest, good-hearted, easy-going fellow, who for twenty years had occupied the same position under half a dozen different consuls.

My old friend, Frank Hutcheson, his Britannic Majesty's vice-consul at the port of Leghorn, was away on leave in England, his duties being relegated to young Bertram Cavendish, the consul. The latter, however, had gone down with a bad touch of malaria, and I, the only other Englishman in Leghorn, had been asked by the consul-general in Florence to act as pro-consul until Hutcheson's return.

It was mid-July, and the weather was blazing in the glaring sun-blanching Mediterranean town. If you know Leghorn, you probably know the consulate, a large, handsome suite of huge, airy offices facing the cathedral. The legend painted upon the door, "Office Hours, 10 to 3," gives one the idea of an easy appointment, but such is certainly not the case, for a consul's life at a port of discharge must necessarily be a very active one.

Carducci had left me to the correspondence for a half an hour or so, when he re-entered, saying:
"There is an English signore waiting to see you."
"Who is he?"
"I don't know him. He will give no name, but wants to see the signore console."

"All right, show him in," I said lazily, and a few moments later a tall, smartly-dressed, middle-aged Englishman entered, and bowing, inquired whether I was the British consul.

When he had seated himself I explained my position, whereupon he said: "I couldn't make much out of your clerk. He speaks so brokenly, and I don't know a word of Italian. But perhaps I ought to first introduce myself. My name is Philip Hornby, and he handed me a card bearing the name with the address 'Woodcroft Park, Somerset—Brook's.' Then he added: 'I am cruising on board my yacht, the Lola, and last night we unfortunately went aground on the Meloria. Very fortunately for us a fishing-boat saw our plight and gave the alarm at port. The admiral sent out two torpedo-boats and a tug, and after about three hours they managed to get us off.'"

"And you are now in harbor?"
"Yes. But the reason I've called is to ask you to do me a favor and write me a letter of thanks in Italian to the admiral, and one to the captain of the port—polite letters that I can copy and send to them. You know the kind of thing."

"Certainly," I replied, the more interested in him on account of the curious suspicion that the port authorities seemed to entertain. He was evidently a gentleman, and after I had been with him ten minutes I scouted the idea that he had endeavored to cast away the Lola.

I scribbled the drafts of two letters. "Fortunately, I left my wife in England, or she would have been terribly frightened," he remarked presently. "There was a nasty wind blowing all night, and the fool of a captain seemed to add to our peril by every order he gave."

I examined him critically as he sat facing me. He was about forty-five, with a round, good-natured face, a pair of deep-set eyes, a blue eye, a fair beard. His hair was graying and cultivated, and he gave me the impression that as an enthusiastic lover of the sea he had cruised the Mediterranean many times from Gibraltar up to Smyrna. He had, however, never before put into Leghorn.

After he had arranged that his captain should come to me in the afternoon and make a formal report of the accident, we went out together across the white sunny piazza to Naar's. "We shall be here quite a week, I suppose," he said as we were taking our vermouth. "We're on our way down to the Greek island, as my friend Chater wants to see them. The engineer says there's something strained that we must get mended. But, by the way," he added, "why don't you dine with us on board tonight? Do. We can give you a few English things that may be a change to you."

This invitation I gladly accepted for two reasons. One was because the suspicious of the captain of the port had aroused my curiosity, and the other was because I had, honestly speaking, taken a great fancy to Hornby. The captain of the Lola, a short, thickest Scotsman from Dundee, with a barely healed cicatrice across his left cheek, called at the consulate at two o'clock and made his report, which appeared to me to be a very lame one. He struck me as being unworthy his certificate, for he was evidently entirely out of his bearings when the accident occurred. The owner and his friend Chater were in their berth asleep, when suddenly he discovered that the vessel was making no headway. They had, in fact, run upon the dangerous shoal without being aware of it. A strong sea was running with a stiff breeze, and although his seamanship was poor, he was capable enough to recognize at once that they were in a very perilous position.

"Very fortunate it wasn't more serious, sir," he added, after telling me his story, which I wrote at his dictation for the ultimate benefit of the board of trade.

"Didn't you send up signals of distress?" I inquired.
"No, sir—never thought of it."
"And yet you knew that you might be lost?" I remarked with recurring suspicion.

The canny Scot, whose name was Mackintosh, hesitated a few moments, then answered: "Well, sir, you see the fishing-boat had sighted us, and we saw her turning back to port to fetch help."
"How long have you been in Mr. Hornby's service?" I inquired.
"Six months, sir," was the man's reply. "Before he engaged me, I was with the Wilsons of Hull, running up the Baltic. I've held my master's certificate these fifteen years, sir. I was with the Bibbys before the Wilsons, and before that with the General Steam. I did eight years in the Mediterranean with them, when I was chief mate."

"And you've never been into Leghorn before?"
"Never, sir."
I dismissed the captain with a distinct impression that he had not told me the whole truth. Was it possible that an attempt had actually been made to cast away the yacht, and that it had been frustrated by the master of the felucca, who had sighted the vessel aground? How, I wondered, had the captain received that very ugly wound across the cheek? I was half-inclined to inquire of him.

That evening when the fiery sun was sinking in its crimson glory I took a cab along the old sea-road to the port where, within the inner harbor, I found the Lola, one of the most magnificent private vessels I had ever seen. Her dimensions surprised me. She was painted dead white, with shining brass everywhere. At the stern hung limply the British flag, at the masthead the ensign of the Royal Yacht Squadron.

On stepping on deck Hornby came forward to greet me, and took me along to the stern where, lying in a long wicker deck-chair beneath the awning, was a tall, dark-eyed, clean-shaven man of about forty. His keen face gave one the impression that he was a barrister.

"My friend, Hylton Chater—Mr. Gordon Gregg," he said, introducing us, and the clean-shaven man exclaimed, smiling pleasantly: "Glad to make your acquaintance, Mr. Gregg. You are not a stranger by any means to Hornby or myself. Indeed, we've got a couple of your books on board. But I had no idea you lived out here."
"At Ardenza," I said. "Three miles along the sea-shore. Tomorrow I hope you'll both come and dine with me."
"Delighted, I'm sure," declared Hornby, and then we began chatting about the peril of the previous night, Hornby telling me how he had copied the two letters of thanks in Italian and sent them to their respective addressees.

"Well, you certainly did the right thing to thank the admiral," I said. "It's very unusual for him to send out torpedo-boats to help a vessel in distress. That is generally left to the harbor tug."
"Yes, I feel that it was most kind of him. That's why I took all the trouble to write. I don't understand a word of Italian, neither does Chater."
"But you have Italians on board?" I remarked.
"The only ones who rowed me out are Genoese, from their accent."

Hornby and Chater exchanged glances—glances of distinct uneasiness, I thought.
Then the owner of the Lola said:

"Yes, they are useful for making arrangements and buying things in Italian ports. We have a Spaniard, a Greek, and a Syrian, all of whom act as interpreters in different places."
"And make a handsome thing in the way of secret commissions, I suppose?" I laughed.
"Of course. But to cruise in comfort one must pay and be pleasant," declared Hornby.

"Did you have any trouble with the customs here?" I inquired.
"They didn't visit us," he said with a smile, and at the same time he rubbed his thumb and finger together, the action of feeling paper money.
This increased my surprise, for I happened to know that the Leghorn customs officers were not at all given to the acceptance of bribes. They were too well watched by their superiors. If the yacht had really escaped a search, then it was a most unusual thing. Besides, what motive could Hornby have in eluding the customs visit? They would, of course, seal up his wines and liquors, but even if they did, they would leave him out sufficient for the consumption of himself and his friends.

No. Philip Hornby had some strong motive in paying a heavy bribe to avoid the visit of the dogana. If he really had paid, he must have paid very heavily; of that I was convinced.
Was it possible that some mystery was hidden on board that splendidly appointed craft?

Presently the gong sounded, and we went below into the elegantly fitted saloon, where was spread a table that sparkled with cut glass and shone with silver. Everywhere it was apparent that none but an extremely wealthy man could afford such a magnificent craft.

Hornby took the head of the table, and we ate one of the choicest and best cooked dinners it has ever been my lot to taste. Chater and I drank wine of a brand which only a millionaire could keep in his cellar, while our host, apparently a most abstemious man, took only a glass of iced Cinciano water.

From his remarks I discerned that, contrary to my first impression, Hylton Chater was an experienced yachtsman. He owned a craft called the Allicia, and was a member of the Cork Yacht Club. He lived in London, he told me, but gave me no information as to his profession. It might be the law, as I had surmised.

"You've seen our ass of a captain, Mr. Gregg?" he remarked presently. "What do you think of him?"
"Well," I said rather hesitatingly, "to tell the truth, I don't think very much of his seamanship—nor will the board of trade when his report reaches them."

"Ah!" exclaimed Hornby. "I was a fool to engage him. From the very first I mistrusted him, only my wife somehow took a fancy to the fellow, and he contained, which had apparently been taken hastily out, torn first in half and then in half again, and cast away.

Curiosity prompted me to stoop, pick up the four pieces and place them together, when I found them to form the cabinet portrait of a sweet-looking and extremely pretty English girl of eighteen or nineteen, with a bright, smiling expression, and wearing a fresh morning blouse of white plique.

About the expression of the pictured face was something which I cannot describe—a curious look in the eyes which was at the same time both attractive and mysterious. In that brief moment the girl's features were indelibly impressed upon my memory.
I looked at the back of the torn photograph, and saw that it had been taken by a well-known and fashionable firm in New Bond street.

Next second, however, hearing Hornby's returning footsteps, I flung the fragments hastily beneath the couch where I had discovered them.
Why, I wondered, had the picture been destroyed—and by whom?
Afterwards on deck I purposely led the conversation to Hornby's family, and learned from him that he had no children.

"You'll get the repairs to your engines done at Orlando's, I suppose?" I remarked, naming the great ship-building firm of Leghorn.
"Yes, I have already given the order. They are contracted to be finished by next Thursday, and then we shall be off to Zante and Chio."

For what reason, I wondered, recollecting that formidable armory on board. Already I had seen quite sufficient to convince me that the Lola, although outwardly a pleasure yacht, was built of steel, armored in its most vulnerable parts, and capable of resisting a very sharp fire.
It was past midnight when, having bade the strange pair adieu, I was put ashore by the two sailors who had rowed me out and drove home along the sea-front, puzzled and perplexed.

Next morning, on my arrival at the consulate, old Francesco, who had entered only a moment before, met me with blanched face, gasping:
"There have been thieves here in the night, signore! The signore console's safe has been opened!"
"The safe!" I cried, dashing into Hutcheson's private room, and finding to my dismay the big safe, where in the seals, ciphers and other confidential documents were kept, standing open, and the contents in disorder, as though a hasty search had been made among them.

Was it possible that the thieves had been after the admiralty and foreign office ciphers, copies of which the chancelleries of certain European powers were endeavoring to obtain? I smiled within myself when I realized how bitterly disappointed the burglars must have been, for a British consul when he goes on leave to England always takes his ciphers with him, and deposits them at the foreign office for safekeeping. Hutcheson had, of course, taken his according to the regular plan.

LONDON TURNS TO BEANS AS FOOD; MEATS TOO HIGH
London, June 9.—The recent rise of meat has caused one of London's great dailies to plead the cause of the bean, a food little used in England.

Meat is the basis of the Englishman's fare. If of the well-to-do class, he buys the best English meat, which is unsurpassed in tenderness and flavor. If unable to afford English meat, he gets the cold storage products of Australia, and the Argentine and the United States. Working classes live on stews made of scraps or of frozen rabbits from Australia. Cabbage, sprouts or cauliflower in varying degrees of freshness and potatoes constitute the rest of the staple fare of Britain.

Lentils are better known than beans and are beginning to have a small vogue as a meat substitute. But about the only bean is the French haricot. The small white bean, the staple food of the western ranches, the mining and laboring home of America, and also the large red bean have yet to be introduced in the British Isles. In no respect are the British more conservative than in the matter of food, but the war has already worked many changes and the recent increase in meat prices amounting from three to four cents a pound may help along the cause of the bean.

Fire Chief Wallace has completed 46 years of service in Cleveland's fire department and at 66 won't resign.

DOWNING STREET STARTED BY AN AMERICAN MAN
(By Associated Press.)
London, June 9.—Downing street, which is a household word in English politics because it contains the official residence of the prime minister, affords one of the earliest examples of American enterprise in London.

It is a narrow lane leading from the medley of government offices in Whitehall. Constructed in the sixteenth century, it was sold by Charles II to Sir George Downing, afterwards secretary of the treasury. Downing was born in America and educated at Harvard university. With American enterprise, he determined to build on his newly acquired property, and he erected there the first brick houses of importance in the metropolis.

Number 10 Downing street, which is now the heart of the British governmental system, was purchased from Downing's grandson in 1734 by Barron Boscawen, and passed to the crown when the baron died intestate. Soon afterwards George II offered it to Walpole, who refused it as a personal gift, but accepted it as an official residence for the prime minister.

C. L. Day, of Beloit, Wis., served on police force to pay his way through college.

It Was an Armory, Crammed With Rifles and Ammunition.

and, as you know, if you want peace you must always please the women. In this case, however, her choice almost cost me the vessel, and perhaps our lives into the bargain.

"The captain seems to have had a nasty cut across the cheek," I remarked, whereupon my two companions again exchanged quick, apprehensive glances.

"He fell down the other day," explained Chater, with a rather sickly smile, I thought. "His face caught the edge of an iron stair in the engine room and caused a nasty gash."

I smiled within myself, for I knew too well that the ugly wound in the captain's face had never been inflicted by falling on the edge of a stair. But I remained silent, being content that they should endeavor to mislead me.

After dessert had been served we rose, and in the summer twilight, when all the ports were opened, Hornby took me over the vessel. As he was conducting me from his own cabin to the boudoir we passed a door that had been blown open by the wind, and which he hastened to close, not, however, before I had time to glance within. To my surprise I discovered that it was an armory crammed with rifles, revolvers and ammunition.

It had not been intended that I should see that interior, and the reason why the customs officers had been bribed was now apparent.

I passed on without remark, making believe that I had not discerned anything unusual, and we entered the GROWTH OF A PENNY.

Many a man has owed his start in life to a sudden realization of the latent earning power of a very small amount of money. Children who have been provided with lavish allowances for which they have done no work are not so likely to realize the value of a penny or a dollar as those who have been paid wages for a fair return in labor, or those who have been given a small amount of money as a nucleus for a greater sum to be obtained by their own efforts. A Sunday school in Indiana wanted to build a chapel and in return for $7 in pennies—one to each child—has reaped $175. One youngster with the cent bought an egg; from the egg a chicken was hatched, and finally the chicken was sold for a dollar. This case was typical. The history of many large and flourishing concerns points back to inconspicuous origins. Men of great faith labored unceasingly in the day of small things, and those who now survey the imposing result can hardly bring themselves to believe that it was reared on a foundation far richer in honor and in determined intent than in money. The most valuable asset in any form of trade or business still is character.

Moral progress is not an intellectual matter. That is an affair of the soul. Only the sensibilities, the emotions, the aspirations, the intuition and the faith are concerned in moral advancement. All the intellect in the world will not advance the moral situation a jot. Dr. Alfred Russell Wallace says the social situation has not improved a particle in the past 3,000 years. This is because it has set up intellect as the motor that moves our civilization. The world has set intellect above the soul; it has ignored the divine impulse, the intuition, the self-powers. The intellect deals almost entirely with matter, with figures, with form, with argument, with analysis, with dogma; but the soul deals with honor, virtue, courage, purity, sacrifice and faith. One deals with circumstances; the other with verities. One is environment, the other is the divine energy. We emphasize intellect in church, in schoolhouse, in legislature, in court, in society. That is the reason the world grows better so slowly, if at all. We ignore the divine impulse, the intuition, the self-evident, and rely on dialectics, on knowledge and the form of expression.

A news item from Alaska says: "The first spike of the government's Alaska railway was driven by Martha White, the first white child born in Alaska." One is prompted to exclaim "Nonsense!" Probably the first white child was born in Alaska of Russian or Finnish parents a hundred years or more ago. That hardy climate evidently breeds hardy fabricators. And yet, as we read the paragraph again, we are disposed to modify the first impression. We notice the name of the child—Martha White. Possibly the item may be precisely truthful. Possibly we have been led astray by a mere typographical error. Possibly it should read "the first White child." The romantic touch may be one of nomenclature rather than color.

It has been declared by scientists that there are 10,000,000 microbes in every dollar bill. Even at that dollar bills are not always safe in a husband's pocket.

GREAT NEED TO STOP WASTE

Lesson That Should Be Impressed on America by the Frightful War in Europe.

Waste is the crime of today, and it is especially the great crime of this awful war; waste in human life, in hope, in love, and in the common savings of us all. Millions of dollars' worth of the savings of the people of this earth, all of them our brothers and our sisters, are daily burned up, exploded, and wasted in the madness of the nations, and even that is a trifle when we compare it to the great human value of the lives that are lost. It will not make any people rich; and we Americans, rarely fortunate in not being involved in the awful strife, shall find our part of the burden to bear. Some time the war will be over, and then waste must stop; it must stop if we are to advance in humanity and civilization over and beyond the yawning gap made by the lust of blood, pride of race, and the vanity of kings. The war has been in progress but a little while and already the cost of it is being borrowed from future generations; extra hard labor and sweat must come from infants now at their mothers' breasts, to make good this debauch of blood and fire. And in the very measure that we waste is the sentence at hard labor upon the rising generation prolonged. We cannot get out of it by being American; the debt is upon us, in unequal measure it is true, but the debt, the obligation to make up the losses, is upon us all.—Atlantic.

Patent Leather Trimmings. Patent leather trimmings are very effective and decidedly new. Most of the dresses thus ornamented are in modified empire style, the skirts very short. One in blue serge has on each side of the skirt four narrow bias ruffles edged with patent leather. Roses of serge and patent leather form an effective trimming for the bodice. Badge of Sanity. The badge of sanity is the ability to co-operate with other people; and the more people you can work with, and for, the bigger and better you are.

We have passed through the savage stage, the stone, the competitive, and now we are passing into the co-operative. We will not be here so very long, anyway, and soon Death, the kind old nurse, will come and rock us to sleep—and we had better help one another while we may.—Elbert Hubbard

TODAY'S ODDEST STORY
Okmulgee, Okl., June 9.—She was fair and good to behold. John Davenport, out of town traveling man, gazed upon her admirably as she tripped along the street.
"Ah there, little one," murmured the knight of the grip in his best tones. But she heeded not.
Undaunted, John followed her, got her street number and then found her phone number. Thereupon he called the house.
"Say, I'm that cute little fellow you passed a while ago—brown suit, gray cap and—"
Bang went the receiver, but John persisted, until the fair one agreed he might drop around this afternoon.
He did. Inside the house, he was confronted by a heavy man with a heavy voice.
John's done with flirting.

Fortune for Missing Boy.
If Keith Dalrymple, the missing Port Alleghany boy, returns home now, after an absence of more than eight years, he will find that the fortune of $365,000 is about all that awaits him. The missing heir's mother, whose death occurred a year ago as a result of worry over her son's absence, has been followed by the death of Hugh Dalrymple, his brother.
Hugh Dalrymple died on his farm near North East. He was a joint heir with Keith Dalrymple of the Arnold-Dalrymple estates, valued at $700,000. Before his death Hugh Dalrymple, like his mother, had spent large sums in searching for Keith, who mysteriously disappeared from the home of his grandmother, Mrs. F. H. Arnold of Long Beach, Cal. Hugh Dalrymple leaves five children, who will inherit the entire fortune should their uncle fail to claim the estate.—Kane (Pa.) Dispatch to Philadelphia North American.

Fish Used Ladders.
Scientists are to scale the impounding wall at Gibraltar dam, on the Straits of Gibraltar, to reach the upper part of the spawning, are reported to be used for their strength and will die.

The city a reach a wall over ten feet high, the top of the stream, over which the water flows. On the top of the wall is a sill for shoving where the fish, seeking to make the long leap, land, and they are carried by the flow back down the stream again.

Engineer Pinedo, who is in charge of the city's reservoir works, reports he has watched dozens of big salmon or salmon trout try to make the leap and fail, and he is of the opinion that all will eventually die. When the impounding wall was built the city did not provide for a fish ladder, hence the trouble.—Santa Barbara Dispatch to Los Angeles Times.

PLEASING SUIT FOR A SMALL BOY.

There are many handsome little suits of white linen, serge, sailcloth and even corded silk for small boys. Small, yet important details distinguish the new models, such as an increased fullness to the long blouse, a new, saucy turn to the cuffed trousers and, perhaps, an abbreviation in their length.

The suit shown here consists of a blouse and side-closing trousers. The cuffs may be omitted from the lower edge of the trousers if desired, but they are very cunning on chubby youngsters and usually well liked. The collar is cut in square outline, but this can be changed easily to a round effect. Even though expensive material be used in developing the suit, its cost cannot mount very high, since 2 1/2 yards of 36-inch goods make the model.

There are so many sections to the pattern that unusual care is required in cutting it. Several parts are to be evenly laid on a fold of the goods—namely, the waistband, collar, blouse front, back, collar and shield. These can be arranged in the order named, working from left to right.

Now on a lengthwise thread place the back, fly, pockets, belt, front of trousers and sleeve. If the trousers are to be made without cuffs at the lower edge find double "oo" perforation on front and back and follow these markings to cut off lower edges. The square collar can have its outline changed to a round effect by cutting off lower part on small "o" perforations.

A very serviceable material for these little suits is khaki linen. Trimmed in white, red, blue or brown braid, it is cool and comfortable looking, yet there is no sacrifice of smartness if the suit is left entirely unadorned.

A belt of patent leather is used when white linen, serge or silk is used to make the suit, but for the tub fabrics, little boy's suits as the newest style of self-belts are just as practical and are pleasing because of their uniformity of effect.

BIG FILM AT BIJOU THEATRE FRIDAY EVE

The Bijou theatre will show the Wm. Brady production of "Woman and Wine," based on the production of a few years ago which attained such prominence in this country.

The story follows: Dick Seymour (impersonated by Mr. Elliott), is fortunate in having a nice father and a nice girl as sweetheart. Money is coming to him. But, tempted by women and wine on the Great White Way of New York, he falls down badly.

His money is in Paris. In that city he goes from bad to worse and is accused of murder. From jail and death there seems no escape. But his father and sweetheart have been loyal to him and he is proved innocent of the crime and saved. He finds happiness by shunning bad company and bad habits.

The duel of two women with knives was one of the features of the original drama; the victor placed the corpse of her victim in a box and covered it with flowers. Along came the heroine now a flower-seller for flowers; to her horror the box contained the body of a dead woman. Horror doesn't describe the intensity of the situation.

BELGIAN STUDENTS FINISH IN ENGLISH

Dublin, June 9.—The senate of the national university of Ireland has forwarded to London a resolution requesting the government to introduce legislation enabling Belgian medical students to complete their courses and obtain their degrees in English schools.

CHILDREN LIVED IN CAVES, BARN, AND TRENCHES

(By Associated Press.)

Paris, June 9.—Three hundred and fifty little Belgian children refugees have just arrived in Paris from the region of the Yser, which has lately been the scene of bitter fighting. Most of the 350 are orphans. In other cases their parents refused to leave their fields, but were anxious that the children should be taken away from the constant danger of bombardment.

For months most of these children have lived in ruined houses, in caves, in barns, and even with the soldiers in the trenches. Colonies for them have now been arranged in southern France, where they will be looked after by Belgian school teachers and Belgian nuns.

WAR BELIEVED TO INCREASE LUNATICS

London, June 9.—Sir James Crifton-Browne, who stands in the forefront of English authorities on mental and nervous diseases, says that one of the saddest results of the war will be a great increase in the number of lunatics.

Addressing the annual meeting of the Asylums Workers' association, he said: "Much of the aftermath of war will find its way into asylums. The enormous number of cranial injuries will undoubtedly lead to much mental impairment. The large number of cases of shock to the nerves and overstrain will cause much neurasthenia and other disorders. There has been throughout the whole country immeasurable sorrow and bereavement which in many cases will deepen into morbid melancholy."

GLADSTONE FRIENDS ADD CONTRIBUTIONS

A most unique contribution was received at this office this morning; two articles contained in a letter and which were donated to the Mirror for use in repairing the Ford car, damaged in a collision Saturday.

The articles are a safety pin two inches in length and an ordinary rubber band. The latter was designated for use as a tire, with the following postscript: "Would have sent a non skid tire if we had one."

The following letter is self explanatory:

"Dear Mirror:
"Having noticed in your paper that you are receiving help in repairing your auto, the Gladstone boys feel as if they ought to help with their mite, so cheerfully contribute the enclosed articles with the hope that we are not too late and that they will be of use to you."

NINTH ANNUAL ROSE FESTIVAL AT PORTLAND

Portland, Ore., June 9.—Portland today commenced the celebration of the Ninth Annual Rose Festival, school children of the city to the number of 10,000 marched in a great parade through the streets, the spectacle winding up with the crowning of Queen Rose.

The crowning ceremonies took place in the festival center, a floral display covering two of the park blocks in the heart of the city's business district. There among the gorgeous beds of bloom, Queen Rose with her six princesses were declared the rulers of the fiesta.

During the afternoon more than 3,000 school children were heard in concert.

During the past year Portland added more than 100 miles of rose bushes to the city's already great display. Portland this year will produce more than 25,000,000 of the beautiful buds.

ARMLESS ARTIST IS TEACHER OF MAIMED

Berlin, June 9.—One of the most useful officials engaged in assisting and teaching crippled soldiers is the well known artist Untham, who was born without arms, but who, nevertheless, has become a remarkable violin player, a painter and an expert swimmer.

Untham is a firm believer in swimming as an aid to the physique of the crippled, and maintains that arms really are a hindrance rather than a help in the water. He recently lectured to a group of persons interested in caring for crippled soldiers, and then gave an exhibition of his remarkable armless swimming. He is being pointed out as an example of courage and independence to be followed by the German soldiers inviolated back home.

RUSS SOLDIERS COMPELLED TO TRAVEL AFOOT

(By Associated Press.)

Warsaw, Russia, June 9.—While the German army generally effects its concentrations and strategic movements by railway or automobile transport, the Russians are generally compelled to travel on foot. During the latest fighting, with its continual play of advance and retreat, some of the Russian corps marched six days and nights without a single break.

The Russians march fifty minutes and halt ten minutes every hour. During the halt footwear is often changed and always readjusted. There are halts of half an hour and two hours several times a day for meals, but when movements are being made under pressure, nothing more. During the movements which necessitated six days and nights of tramping, the steady marching continued without interruption, the men sometimes sleeping as they walked and waked only when they stumbled and fell. In the last periods of this splendid march even the regulation halts were curtailed. These men are now in the fighting line, having come to the front by forced marches in order to reinforce places threatened by the German phalanx attacks.
