This is an awful situation for a circuit judge to face and I want to say to you sheriffs, deputies and police officers, that you are responsible for the enforcement of law in this county and any of you who neglect your duty are in a way responsible and I want to see you do your duty."

ALFALFA MIRACLE WORKER FOR FARM, ASSERTS KANSAS MAN

(By Associated Press)

Columbus, O., Jan. 13.—Farm miracles can be worked with alfalfa, F. D. Coburn, former state secretary of agriculture in Kansas said today in an address at the annual meeting of the Ohio board of agriculture. The grass serves the triple purpose, he said, of rejuvenating the ground on which it is grown, making a profitable crop and giving more nutriment for live stock than any other forage crop.

Dean Alfred Vivian of the college of agriculture, Ohio State University, told the farm institute workers, county fair managers and farmers who attended the meeting that soil fertility cannot be maintained without use of phosphates under all circumstances. The use of nitrogenous material and potash depends on local conditions, he said.

Other speakers on the program were Governor Willis and President John Begg of the state board of agriculture.

"That's why there aren't many new plays being originated in these days. Players hate to take the chance of falling down and being labeled a bonehead."

CARRANZA, NEVER AN IDOL OF THE MEXICANS, HAS A HARD TASK AHEAD

Faces a Gigantic Work in the Resuscitation of War-Torn Mexico—His Government Opposed by Organized Government Only in the State of Oaxaca—Brigandage Exists in Almost Every Section of the Country.

El Paso, Tex.—Although he has composed peace with the followers of Francisco Villa and finds his government opposed by an organized government only in the state of Oaxaca, Venustiano Carranza today faces a gigantic problem in the resuscitation of war-torn Mexico. His handicaps, in the order of their difficulty, may be summarized as follows:

1. Brigandage in almost every section of the country; widespread love of a buccaneering life, brought about by the succession of revolutions.
2. Zapata's revolutionary army in the Montenegro-like state of Morelos.
3. The state government of Oaxaca. This government is a novelty in Mexico, and has maintained order and declared itself "neutral" toward Villa and Carranza and other chieftains of warlike proclivity.
4. The question of "manhood," i. e., the difficulty of finding suitable men for government positions.
5. An empty national treasury and prostrated industries. Typhus.

As to brigandage, an American named Simons, who arrived in Laredo, Tex., a few days ago from a point near Mexico City, where he is engaged in business, brings an interesting story. He describes chaotic conditions prevalent in the country contiguous to the Mexican capital at this time where, environed by contagious diseases and pestilence on the one hand, and by marauding bands of outlaws and recalcitrant people generally on the other hand, Gen. Pablo Gonzales, the Carranza military commander of Mexico City, is confronted with an intricate problem.

Within a radius of 35 miles northwest of Mexico City the land is filled with bands of outlaws and marauding and devastation is keeping them busy. Large haciendas, or ranches, are being raided by these outlaws, the homes looted and the people compelled to flee to safety, and in some instances, the torch applied. The roving bands of marauders are strongly organized and travel in large force, and whenever Carranza soldiers are sent out to attempt to disperse them or give battle, the soldiery is generally defeated. Only recently a force of Carranza men sent out to a point northwest of Mexico City about 20 miles failed to return, and it is believed they were ambushed by the outlaws and annihilated.

However, the principal abode of lawlessness at this time begins at a point 35 miles northwest of the Mexican capital, says the American, and in that section the country is swarming with brigands. They are neither Zapatistas nor Villistas, but each large band has its leader, and with them the orders of the leader is law. Occasionally these men engage the soldiers of both Carranza and Zapata, but the Zapatistas are thinning out around Mexico City now and are taking to the mountainous country to the southwest of the capital.

Gen. Pablo Gonzales has exerted his utmost effort to quell the disturbances in his district, states the American, but he has an inadequate force to cope with the situation with which he is confronted at this time. There is even dissension noticeable among his men, because of the restrictions exacted to confine them to certain quarters of the city on account of the unwholesome health conditions prevailing.

In the Pachuca district, says Mr. Simons, there is occasional fighting now between forces representing the factions of Carranza, Villa, Zapata and even Oaxaca Indians. The latter Indians are inclined to cast their lots with any faction that appears in the majority, and when there is any uncertainty as to this condition they fight for themselves, loot and raise havoc generally.

"The state of Oaxaca is neutral and conducting her affairs independently of all the rest of Mexico," says Mr. Simons. "The governor of that state was put in the executive chair by the people of Oaxaca; he has a large army to carry out his orders and the people generally are loyal to the governor. There is no trespassing in the state allowed from Carranza, Villa, Zapata or other factional forces or brigands." In this state perfect tranquility is being maintained and the state government is not being molested by outside influences. In Oaxaca, the state government has exacted but one promise from the people besides that of living peacefully and lawfully—that is, that they will not use the factional currency of either Carranza or Villa, but that the silver bills of Oaxaca, together with silver and gold money, shall be the prevailing medium of circulation.

Has Done Great Work.

ous country and in the fastnesses of the mountains they elude pursuit." However, the American states that First Chief Carranza has so far accomplished a great work for Mexico, for in many places the old-time prosperity and general activity has been restored, mines and other industries have resumed and an air of confidence prevails. Many Americans and other foreigners who from two to four years ago fled from the country on account of the revolution are now returning there—some to take old positions which they gave up, and others to make investments and hazard the chances of making good now that peace appears to be firmly established in portions of the country.

Some interesting details of Carranza's recent tour of the northern states arrived here today from Saltillo. Accompanying him was Gen. Alvaro Obregon, the man who defeated Villa, now the strongest military figure in Mexico.

Wherever the news of the coming of the first chief preceded his flock of special trains—there were seven of them—the national colors blossomed in all the pristine exuberance of the Diaz regime. From Tampico to Saltillo the Mexican revived not only the practice of decorating their communities with the national colors and playing the national anthem, but the art of building triumphal arches.

In his native city, Saltillo, a series of beautifully-designed arches showed him the way back to the state capital from the balcony of which in February, 1913, he proclaimed the beginning of the revolution against Victoriano Huerta and from the courtyard of which he mounted his horse and set forth to restore to the people their constitutional rights. The arches bore such inscriptions as these:

- "Venustiano Carranza, preserver of the national liberties."
- "Venustiano Carranza has spoken for the soul of his people."
- "Venustiano Carranza, the liberator, the patriot, the hero."

Tell a Wretched Story. The neighborhood of Saltillo has always been a Carranzista country, but the abundant wreckage of trains, stations and public buildings in the state of Nuevo Leon and the stilled industries tell a wretched story of even comparatively recent differences of opinion among the inhabitants.

The almost empty streets of Monterey—once the Pittsburgh of Mexico—also tell a story. Less than a year ago Antonio Villarreal was there. He professed allegiance to the constitutional cause. Angeles came and drove him out. Villarreal's retreat was accompanied by much random shooting that dropped scores of civilians. The magnificent new railroad station was fired. Shells laid low many homes of the poor people.

Villa came a few months ago and compelled the tradespeople to pay 1,000,000 pesos. Then the Villistas fled before Trevina and there was more heiter-skelter shooting—more killed lookers-on. So, when Monterey heard that Carranza and Obregon were coming with many trains of Yaquis, Monterey obeyed orders to take a holiday and then kept off the streets.

In the mile-long procession that Governor de la Garza got up in honor of the distinguished visitors there were more men than all the men, women and children on the sidewalks. But it was the most orderly parade of revolutionists that had taken place in Monterey since the beginning of the days of occupations, evacuations and triumphal entries. And so towards the latter part of the afternoon the people of Monterey emerged from their houses and wandered around in search of the celebrities.

There was a kerfuss in the evening at one of the Alamedas. Carranza went to it. He bought huge quantities of flowers, submitted to "arrest" and "fine" of 199 pesos, shook hands with all the pretty young ladies and as usual, bore himself with dignity. Obregon went to the kerfuss, too. The young ladies made a tremendous ado over this handsome one-armed hero of the revolution. When the two men left the park everybody crowded around their automobiles and shouted "vivas." It was the first time for many a day that any considerable number of representative Monterey folks had shouted vivas for revolutionaries.

Back in the first Constitutional occupation of the City of Mexico, when Carranza rode forth in Avenida Francisco I. Madero or in the Paseo the people paused to look at him and to say to one another:

"There goes Carranza!"

The Cause, Not the Man.

If they did not have too many savedropping neighbors they were likely to add one or two other favorite words. Seldom or never, came a "viva." The silence was damning. If it were broken at all by an outcry the enthusiast turned out to be a man in uniform. But all through the states of Tamaulipas and Nuevo Leon and through Coahuila to this city Carranza has been given abundant evidence of one-minded revolutionary enthusiasm. He has accepted this homage with grave dignity, often with unchanging face, like a man after all receiving only his due.

"It is not enthusiasm for the man," say his followers. "It is for the cause that he represents and leads—the cause of the people." The Mexicans use the words "el pueblo." While the dictionary translation of "el pueblo" is "the people," the words "the populace" serve best to convey the Mexican meaning.

They are mostly Indians who gather at the stations and through the city streets to shout "vivas" for Carranza and Obregon. It is doubtful if more than one in fifty of them can read or write, but there is no doubt that they know Carranza when he steps forth from his car, and the mere sight of Obregon sends them into hysterics.

The gravity of Carranza on tour, or elsewhere, for that matter, is imperforable, and so perhaps what his followers say is true, that the enthusiasm is for the cause that he represents. Certainly local spokesmen tell him eloquently to his face that the people have gathered to emphasize to him the meaning of the cause of the people. They say this with all respect and they give him their gratitude and homage, but always, even in the most obscure mountain hamlets, the cause of the people is placed above personalities.

The appeal of Obregon to hamlet groups and city populaces is instantaneous. He is a gallant, cheery figure that takes the eye. From him radiates a world of energy; its effect is magical. The cause of the people may be the greatest thing in the world to these audiences of First Chief Carranza on his triumphal tour, but Obregon is a full-fledged hero. He has all the attributes of the hero, including a stump of an arm which his victory at Calaya left him.

All the sunshine of Mexico plays over Obregon's handsome Irish face. He likes his people, and he likes them so well that even as he smiles back at them he moves a little closer to Carranza's side and stands there aggressively for all the world to know that he is with Carranza, to give the lie to the rumors that a breach between the two men is a possibility.

Germans Lead in Wireless.

There are about ten wireless stations in France, the most powerful being that of the Eiffel tower. The Germans have many more, and especially the great station of Nauen, with a constant transmitting power of 6,000 miles, occasionally raised to 7,500 miles. They have a similar post in Spain, and another at Sayville, L. I., opposite New York. The three pylons of the latter, each nearly 500 feet high, with the antennae and all the apparatus, were manufactured in Germany, and sent from Rotterdam to Hoboken by a Holland-America steamer. When the cables connecting America with Germany were cut she had already prepared a perfect substitute, or nearly so.

who assaulted Mrs. Trask and broke open the safe. In the hope of learning the identity of this man and if possible Strickland's motive in shielding him I endeavored to locate the members of Strickland's family.

"Judge of my surprise, gentlemen, when I learned that the defendant's wife had disappeared from home on the night of the tragedy and has not since been heard from. All my attempts to find her have been fruitless. I have been forced to believe that she took her life. I did succeed in finding Doris, the little daughter of the defendant. When you have heard her story, gentlemen, you will agree with me that to send Strickland to his death 'Swear them.' Judge Dinsmore directed the clerk.

At the time they became acquainted Strickland was a rather prosperous business man, and he and Mr. Trask met frequently. Some months ago Strickland began to have business troubles. The cause of these difficulties does not concern us. But what does interest us, gentlemen, is that Strickland, becoming more and more involved, found it necessary to go to his friend, Gerald Trask, for financial assistance.

"Mr. Trask responded with his habitual generosity and promptly loaned Strickland $10,000, taking the latter's note as security. But Strickland's business didn't improve, and he decided to migrate to the west. The note was payable on June 22, two days before the murder.

"When the 22d arrived Strickland was in Cleveland, O., making arrangements for himself and family. He returned, however, on the 21th, the night of the murder, sent for Mr. Trask and took up the note. I call your attention to the fact, gentlemen, that Strickland paid the debt in cash. He was a business man. He did not pay it in check or draft, but cash! Ten thousand dollars in cash!

"Mr. Trask had offered to let the man stand until Strickland was on his feet again, but Strickland wouldn't hear of it. You will understand his eagerness to cancel the debt in a moment, gentlemen. It was because he had evolved a little plan whereby he could wipe out the obligation without costing him a cent. The scheme was simple enough, gentlemen. He knew that Mr. Trask would have to keep the man in his house overnight and that he would almost certainly pick it up in the safe in the library. And what is more, gentlemen, he knew a combination to Mr. Trask's safe. It was in his mind that only two people knew the combination to that safe—Trask and Strickland."

The prosecutor's voice had risen to a pitch marked by tones of bitter denunciation. Gray was plainly strong for oratorical effect.

But Strickland hadn't the nerve to do a job alone, so he called in an assistant. Accordingly he and his accomplice entered Mr. Trask's house a few hours before Strickland had paid over the money. The accomplice went to work on the safe and Strickland stood guard. The latter succeeded without much difficulty in opening the safe and extracting the $10,000, while Strickland supervised the job. Before they could escape, however, they were interrupted by Mrs. Trask and then by her husband. The accomplice made a dash for it, taking the plunder with him. That was the last that was heard of the accomplice, gentlemen. Who he was or where he went we have been unable to learn. Now Gray was literally shrieking.

At Mr. Strickland was caught red-handed, and believing, evidently, that men tell no tales, he shot and killed Mr. Trask in cold blood. Here you have the story, gentlemen.

men. Mrs. Trask, the widow of the murdered man, will tell it to you in detail. Her testimony will be corroborated by Mr. Glover, Mr. Trask's wife, a gross miscarriage of justice. That is all for the present, gentlemen."

Arbuckle resumed his seat at the counsel table.

During these proceedings the defendant, Strickland, showing by his pallor the effect of his incarceration in the Tombs prison, across the way, awaiting trial, had sat watching every move of the legal luminaries on both sides. At times his hands clutched nervously and he made pronounced efforts to swallow; again the muscles about his eyes contracted tensely. He was suffering acutely.

Yes, he was suffering as only can a man of education and refinement, one time head of a happy, prosperous home, who suddenly awakes as from a hideous nightmare to find himself in the grewsome predicament now confronting.

Suddenly, to the amazement of all present, as Arbuckle concluded, the accused sprang to his feet. Before his counsel could restrain him the prisoner cried hysterically, with outstretched arms: "Your honor, I won't have it. I won't have my little girl dragged into this case. I've pleaded guilty. I'm willing to suffer the consequences."

Judge Dinsmore replied calmly: "Your case is in the hands of your counsel. Be silent and be seated."

"I don't want counsel. I have no defense. Why don't you sentence me? Why—why?" he shrieked. He sat down, sobbing bitterly, as the judge banged his gavel. (To be Continued)

GEORGE HAS CONFIDENCE.

Charley Herzog admires game-ness and confidence in a player. and when he heard a good one on Lefty George he decided to give him a chance. George was with Toledo in the year that Topsy Hartzell managed the Mudhens. During a meeting in the spring Hartzell, in an address to the players, invited them to speak on matters pertaining to the good of the club. The irrepressible Lefty stepped into the circle, and clearing his throat, he said: "Well, men, with a great leader like Topsy here and me in there every fourth day, I can't see anything to it but the pen-nant for the Mudhens."

VANDERBILT CUP RACE BACK

Will Be Held on Sheepshead Bay (N. Y.) Speedway May 13. The Vanderbilt cup race, designed originally as a road event and in its day the greatest of American automobile racing classics, is to return to New York after about six years. It will be run on the Sheepshead Bay Motor Speedway at a distance of 300 miles or less. The date is May 13, 1916. The race was run first in 1904 over Long Island roads. With the exception of two years it was held on Long Island until 1911. Then it was held at Savannah. It went to Milwaukee in 1912 and was held on the Pacific coast for three years. It was practically a speedway event this year as run at the Panama Pacific exposition.

MONARCHS LITTLE MEN.

Although the popular notion of kingly authority is associated with men of imposing stature, the fact is that little men rule among kings and have always done so. Emperor William of Germany is so small that he wears high tops and thick-soled shoes when he walks, and uses high saddles when he rides, to give the impression of height. Contrary to the conception of the Russians, the czar is hardly taller than Emperor William. King Oscar of Norway and Sweden is of medium build, and King Victor Emmanuel of Italy is frail and slight. The sultan of Turkey is less than average stature. Alexander, who sighed for more worlds to conquer, was small, and so was Napoleon, the little corporal. Richard III was a hunchback. King Edward was only 5 feet 6 inches tall. General Grant was of medium height, and Lord Roberts, affectionately known as "Bobs," was 5 feet in height.

In England the punishment of the stocks has been inflicted within the memory of men now living. In the Manchester Guardian of June 14, 1872, there is an account of a man enduring this form of punishment at Newbury. He was a rag and bone dealer of intemperate habits and was fixed in the stocks for drunkenness and disorderly conduct. "Twenty-six years had elapsed since the stocks were last used," states this account, "and their reappearance created no little sensation and amusement, several hundreds of persons being attracted to the spot where they were fixed." The "amusement" does not appear to have been shared by the prisoner, who was released after four hours and "seemed anything but pleased with the laughter and derision of the crowd."

Maeterlinck, in a beautiful article in the Figaro, tells us, reiterating the message of the "Blue Bird," "the dead do not die." One sees the loss of so many young existences, and one is struck with the feeling of despair that such fine energies and such hopes should come to naught. Never has there been such a waste of human treasure. For more than twelve months, on all the battlefields, the bravest, the most ardent, the most devoted have died. But, declares the Belgian master, the virtues of the heroes cannot die. Perhaps their heroism enters into us, as the pagans thought. In any case, nothing is lost—that is his teaching; we are the richer for their precious sacrifice.

LEWIS AMERICA'S MAT HOPE

"Strangler Ed" Shows Up as One of Best Grapplers in States.

Since the retirement of Frank Gotch many grapplers have come here from foreign shores with such phenomenal records that the American sporting fraternity for awhile began to feel that the crown of champion would eventually be shifted to one of these European stars.

Lately, however, the remarkable work of two young Yankee mat artists has been of such a high caliber as to warrant the belief of many prominent American sportsmen that the crown of champion will continue to be worn by one of our boys.

The stars and stripes will pin his hopes in Joe Stecher of Nebraska and "Strangler Ed" Lewis.

The present "strangler" is not the strangler of old that dad talks about. He is a youngster from old Kentucky, just twenty-three years of age, with a herculean build and enough speed and ability to cope with any man in the world.

Lewis, unlike most wrestlers, is a young man of education and refinement. He was a student at the University of Kentucky and after winning all sorts of honors at college decided to go after fame and fortune.

Off the mat the Strangler is a most pleasing fellow, with an ever ready smile.

smile—in fact, he is so polished in his manners that you can hardly realize that he is the same fellow you later see on the mat. When stripped for action his 230 pounds show to advantage in a perfectly developed physique. The smile leaves, and in its place you see the face of a man of determination—with "fight" written all over it. Lewis is there to pin his opponent down and, absolutely oblivious to all about him, goes to his task and finishes his win as soon as possible.

PUTS WAR LOSSES 7,997,000

United States General Estimates Allied Casualties at 4,167,000—Germany's 1,300,000.

West Point, N. Y.—Gen. Francis Vinton Greene, U. S. A., retired, in an address before the New York State Historical association, gave what he called an "intelligent guess" of the casualties.

He estimated the number of killed at 2,066,000, the wounded at 3,626,000 the missing 2,305,000 and the total casualties at 7,997,000. These were minimum figures, the general said.

General Greene divided the total losses as follows: Great Britain, 293,000; France, 1,400,000; Russia, 2,200,000; Italy, 25,000; Belgium, 80,000; Serbia, 70,000. Total allied losses, 4,167,000. Losses of the Teutonic allies were estimated as: Germany, 1,300,000; Austria, 1,800,000; Turkey, 120,000. Total for Teutonic allies, 3,230,000.

AUTOMOBILE QUERIES AND ANSWERS

What is meant by casehardening? Casehardening refers to a process of producing a hard coating of metal over a piece of steel. The process consists in heating the metal and then lightly sprinkling potassium cyanide over it while it is hot. This causes an action between the metal and the cyanide, with the production of a coating which is very hard. This case or coating has good wearing qualities and protects the inner metal, which is softer and acts as a cushion for the case. Aside from the cyanide mentioned above, charcoal is used or charcoal mixed with barium carbonate.

Can a high tension magnet that runs at crank shaft speed and rotates clockwise be timed or changed to rotate in the opposite direction, or anti-clockwise?

The magnets referred to can be changed to run anti-clockwise by simply removing the gears from the distributor and resetting them so as to carry the current over the points of contact throughout the full range of spark advance at full retard and at full advance. Simply take the gears out of the distributor, revolving the armature by hand in an anti-clockwise direction, and when the position in which the armature turns requires a good deal of force to continue the turning, due to the pull of the magnets, insert the gear in the distributor so that it is just coming into the metal contact. If the model magnet referred to has a roller type distributor the same operation holds good, except that the roller with the internal gear should be set so that the contacts are just meeting the small metal roller.

What advantages are gained by fitting three piston rings to the grooves instead of one?

The advantages claimed for special piston rings are that they hold compression better, prevent oil from entering the compression chamber more effectively and in some cases reduce the wear on the cylinder walls.

How close would you advise the fitting of magnalium pistons in cylinders? All depends upon the type and size of the motor. The coefficient of expansion of magnalium is not much greater than cast iron, and the usual method is to allow .0007 in. more per inch of bore than for cast iron. In other words, if the cast iron pistons have top and bottom clearances of .004 and .002 add from .0005 to .00075 inch for magnalium.

Is there a serious objection to mixing cylinder oil with the gasoline, and is there any advantage in it as a lubricant for the cylinders?

There is no objection to mixing cylinder oil with gasoline. It serves as a lubricant to the cylinders and is claimed by many to be an advantage, especially as regards two cycle motors.

What is the difference in size of tires of the clincher and clincher Q. D. types, or why is it that a clincher tire will not fit the same rim that a clincher Q. D. of a given size will fit?

The difference between the clincher and the Q. D. clincher type is not one of size, but rather of bead construction. The bead of the regulation clincher tire is soft and made to stretch over the rim, whereas in the Q. D. design the bead does not have to stretch over the rim and hence can be made stiffer.

THE RED QUILL

By IZOLA FORRESTER.

John Holloway stepped from the elevator numb and blind to the hurrying life around him. He did not even feel the first tense agony of his loss. There only remained a blind submission to whatever immutable laws had caused his ruin. For it was that—ruin utter and complete.

He had put every dollar of his savings into Tate's venture. And it had been all right, fair and legitimate. Tate was true to his part of the bargain. The government was to take over the whole thing from him, he had said. He had letters to prove it. And suddenly here had come the blow. The device had been patented 30 years before. Not as Tate had imagined it in its entirety, but sufficient to kill the project and send Holloway's ten thousand into thin air.

"I wish I were dead," he kept saying to himself doggedly, wretchedly. Ahead of him, as he turned into the subway entrance, was a girl. The red quill in her jaunty cap held his attention. It was like the flicker of color under an oriole's wing. He saw it again on the crowded platform, and when they got into the express it was ahead of him. Red was the hue of courage, he had read somewhere. It stood for life and brotherhood, too. Out of the dumb despair that bound him, it was the sole thing that held his attention. At Fourteenth street he saw a youngster get on the train and join her. Above the roar of the train their low laughter reached him. Their voices came to him when he slipped wearily into the cross-section seat beside them.

"We don't need a flat," she was saying. "You can do lots in a furnished room. If you know how. I'd rather than wait, Joe."

"Sure," he agreed warmly. "About another month; what do you say? Money ain't everything."

He squeezed her arm and smiled down at her. Holloway closed his eyes against the challenge of their happiness.

And then, as the train slipped into the first local stop, there came the crash, the grinding of the brakes and slowly the darkness and cries around, the dull sensation of people stampeding for the doors. Holloway felt a hand on his shoulder. It was the boy.

"Could you help me lift her? She's fainted."

He was striving to hold her, but the crush was terrific. Holloway was tall and gaunt, sinewy. He lifted the girl high in his arms and told the boy to go ahead. The smoke was beginning to sting his throat and nostrils. Once he realized he was treading on fallen bodies. Hands touched him out of the darkness, tore at his clothes and gripped his legs, but he went on grimly. Inch by inch, step by step, and gradually one after another followed him, winding sinuously through the long train. The front car nosed the end of the platform behind the stalled local.

"Why don't you open that door?" the boy asked in agony. Laconically the motorman turned his head.

"What's the matter with you all?" he demanded banteringly. "Youse kin'ly die once."

The boy jammed him aside and pushed the lever that opened the door. "Step over the rail," he called out.

"You're all right. Step over the rail!" He was one of the first on the narrow end of the platform. Holloway handed the girl to him and turned to help others. They seemed to well and gush forth out of the dark body of the train, human beings seeking life.

Standing between the train and the concrete wall, with the third rail in perilous nearness, he passed them on from the train to the platform, women and girls, children and men. They reached for his hand and he swung them up to safety. Then came another surging wave of dense smoke and he lost consciousness.

When he opened his eyes he was up in the fresh air. They had been using a pulmotor on him. As he opened his eyes he saw the eager faces of the crowd and the girl nearest.

"Gee!" gasped a boy. "Some hero, ain't he?"

"All right, now, old man, aren't you?" asked the ambulance surgeon. "Who's your nearest friend?"

Holloway shook his head. The boy pressed forward, his hat on the back of his head, his arm around the girl's shoulders.

"I am," he said, eagerly. "I'll look out for him. The company'll settle with him for this, but money ain't everything. He can come home with me."

Holloway looked up at the sky, dark already with the early winter night. Its stars were dim beyond the electric lights, but they were there. A curious glow enfolded him. He felt a kinship with the crowding faces. They were his. He had saved them. He was not alone any longer. Tate and the money loss seemed like some trivial, faraway memory. Over him leaned the girl with the red quill in her cap, smiling at him joyously, the girl he had carried in his arms through the darkness, and behind her was the boy she loved.

The red quill—red for courage—red for brotherly love, red for joy of life. Holloway smiled back at her as they lifted him tenderly into the ambulance. The world looked mighty good to him just then.

Chance to Think.

"Miss Gadders talks so much and so fast that it is impossible to get in a word."

"Yes, but I find her conversation a great help to me at times," said Professor Diggers, who is compelled to leave his study occasionally to fulfill his social obligations.

"Impossible!"

"Nevertheless it is quite true. When she talks I'm able to concentrate my mind on matters that demand my undivided attention, whereas if I were in the society of a less voluble person I might, now and then, have to make some sort of reply."

Easy & Practical Home Dress Making Lessons

Prepared Especially For This Newspaper by Pictorial Review

New Skirt With Hip Yoke and Pockets.

Women of fashion are showing enthusiasm over the delightfully smart skirts that continue to appear in unbroken succession in the world of dress. One of the newest effects is the hip-yoke, with pointed pockets at the side, used on five-gored models such as is shown here. The skirt closes at the center-back, and the yoke is capable of charming variation, especially as regards the finish of its lower edge. In medium size the skirt requires 3 yards 54-inch material, with 1/4 yard less if the hip yoke is omitted.

In cutting out the skirt mistakes may be avoided by closely studying the cutting guide. It will be noticed that the front gore is laid on the lengthwise fold of the material, just to the right of the back gore, which is on a lengthwise thread. The side gore is placed next to the back gore, the space created by sloping the side gore the pocket is laid on a lengthwise thread. The yoke, which is placed to the extreme right of the goods, is laid on a lengthwise fold. If the home dressmaker prefers a deep yoke with rounded lower edge, cut off the lower edge on small "o" perforations. The short yoke is obtained by cutting off the lower edge of the pattern on double "oo" perforations.

This is a type of skirt that will look well at all times. As a part of a three-piece suit it is stylish and as a separate model nothing more chic could be desired. The ingenious woman readily sees the possibilities offered for trimming the skirt. A band of fur may finish the lower edge, or deep folds of velvet may be stitched above the hem. A braid trimming is also effective.

Pictorial Review Skirt No. 6359. Sizes 22, 24, 26, 28, 30, 32, 34, 36, 38 and 40 inches waist. Price, 15 cents.

RUSS CAPTURE

The fact that the French are now in possession of the island of Corfu, formerly owned by the King of Greece and that the occupation is now complete has aroused a protest from Greece. The protest is largely a formal one and it is said the allies have given Greece assurances that it will be only used for the purpose of protecting the Serbian army from starvation.

Austrian forces are still developing their campaign against the Montenegrins and the fall of Cetinje is possible in the near future.

GERMAN ATTACK DEVELOPS

Rome, Jan. 13.—The attack of the Germanic allies on the entente at Salonika is rapidly developing on a large scale according to the Athens correspondent of an Italian newspaper, telegraphing under date of Tuesday. He reports a bombardment of the British lines at the Dolran zone.

MT. LOVCEN IMPORTANT

Rome, Jan. 13.—The capture of Mt. Lovcen by the Austrians is regarded here as presenting a great menace to Italy. Military experts point out that the Austrians are thereby given domination of the Adriatic coast and will further be able to invade northern Albania. Italian papers are appealing to the allies for intervention to spare Montenegro.

Rome, Jan. 13.—Unconfirmed advices from Swiss sources on Wednesday reported that the German crown prince had been recalled to Berlin, probably to assume the regency on account of the emperor's illness. It was stated that the reports reached Switzerland directly from Berlin.

Dispatches a few days ago said it was learned on good authority that the emperor's illness was not serious, and that he would be out within a few days. Within the past twenty-four hours, however, rumors that the emperor's condition was serious had been revived. An Amsterdam dispatch to the London Daily Express reported rumors in circulation in Germany that the emperor was dying. The Amsterdam dispatch said that color was lent to this report by the fact that the German press is full of extravagant eulogies of the crown prince.

Fall of Capital Near.

Rome, Jan. 13.—The early fall of Cetinje, the Montenegrin capital, was forecast in dispatches received here confirming the news that the Austrians have occupied Mount Lovcen, "the Gibraltar of the Adriatic," dominating the roads to Cetinje and less than seven miles away. "The Austrians are advancing toward Cetinje and the fighting continues," said an official dispatch to the Montenegrin consul on Wednesday. "The government archives have been removed."

The arsenal at Cetinje has been dismantled and everything of military value removed. Preparations are being made to transfer the capital, but the new seat of government has not been selected.

Mount Lovcen fell after five days of terrific and uninterrupted bombardment by the Austrian squadron in Cattara harbor, the harbor forts and lighter Austrian artillery brought up to close range.

Say Germans Lost 25,000.

Paris, Jan. 13.—The Germans lost more than 15,000 men in the Sunday onslaughts against the French lines in Champagne, according to Chalon dispatches on Wednesday describing the battle as the bloodiest on the western front since the allied offensive last September. Great numbers of wounded German prisoners have reached Chalon. They confirm the report that Gen von Einem planned to break through the French line and bend back the whole front from Rheims to Verdun. The prisoners complained that the German artillery failed to do its work.

For the British public the latest statements regarding the situation in Mesopotamia will not entirely relieve the anxiety. The British Gen. Aylmer's column, which is advancing to the relief of Kut-el-Amara, has met and repulsed a strong Turkish force, but its present position is by no means satisfactory, for it finds in front of it a Turkish army greatly superior in numbers.

Under the direction of Edgar Lewis the newly engaged producer for the Lubin company, the company numbering sixteen with camera men, carpenters, and guides were quartered at the bottom of the Grand Canyon of Arizona for more than four weeks in the taking of the remarkable exterior scenes of the production, which have been generously praised as the most beautiful scenic views ever shown on the screen.

"The Great Divide" is heralded as one of the most expensive productions which has been produced by any of the makers of motion pictures and it abounds with thrill upon thrill and a standard of photo-playing which bespeaks credit for anyone of its cast from the stars to the most humble player.

Manager Hines of the Strand theatre has booked "The Great Divide" as the attraction at the Strand theatre for an early showing.

Escanaba's latest "mystery man" has left St. Francis hospital. He left without the slightest inkling being allowed to get out regarding his identity and nurses at the institution stated this afternoon that they had no information which could throw any light upon the question. The man was picked up by officers on Monday night after he had been found lying in the center of the street at Charlotte and Ludington streets in an unconscious condition. He was taken to the hospital where he remained unconscious the better part of two days. Yesterday he recovered and last evening left without giving any information as to his name or his home. As there is no apparent reason for the secretiveness of the man, his actions in this regard have caused some comment.
