BATH ROBES AND NEGLIGEES

Ideas for Cold Weather That Are Well Worthy of Having a Place in the Memory.

The winter negligee may be as diaphanous as chiffon and lace can make it, but the winter bath robe, to be right, must be warm and downy. Nothing is more uncomfortable than to emerge from a refreshing bath to find the world grown cold. A' thick bath robe is sure to make the world seem warm and cozy.

A blanket robe is durable and comfortable and can be made quite becoming. It should be rather full in cut, and not long enough to touch the floor. Little Helen Holmes, daughter of General Holmes, railroad man, is rescued from imminent danger on a scenic railroad, by George Storm, a newsboy, Grewn to young womanhood Helen makes a spectacular double rescue of Storm, now a freight fireman, and of her father and his friends, Amos Rhinelander, financier, and Robert Seagrue, promoter, from a threat-ened collision between a passenger train and a runaway freight.

CHAPTER II.

A fight among the directors-and a bitter fight-had been indicated from the moment the allotment of the stock issue of the new Copper Range and Tidewater cut-off line was discussed. It was not alone that the territory of the proposed cut-off was rich in traffic. The survey made by Holmes' engineers through a wild country, hitherto reputed inaccessible, had developed a low-grade pass through the Superstition mountains that would put the Tidewater's active rival-the Colorado and Coast line-with its heavy grades and curves, at a serious, if not irretrievable, disadvantage, in its fight for competitive traffic.

General Holmes, seated in the library of his country home with his associate, Amos Rhinelander, took from his morning mail a letter from John B. Rhodes, chairman of his executive committee, which revealed the extent of the feeling over the situation. Holmes handed the letter to Rhinelander. Rhodes had discovered that their competitors already had a surveying party out on reconnoisance. endeavoring to locate the Tidewater pass; having in view the reputation for sharp practice of the Colorado line backers, he urged Holmes to keep a close watch on the original survey. now in the general's possession, until the right of way should be definitely secured. He added that with his party of the directors, he would arrive on a special at noon for the informal board meeting at which means for financing the project were to be arranged.

Seagrue and Seagrue's attorney, Capelle-Seagrue was owner of a substantial interest in the Colorado and Coast line itself. Indeed, his means were all tied up in it. It was this complication which caused uneasiness in stances, not to connive against his in-Seagrue had already been for the week-end the house guest of Holmes. He was at that moment seated in the garden with Helen-Holmes' daughter -and Helen was being alternately amused and bored by the patently forced efforts of the easterner to interest her in himself and his affairs. More than once during his stay she had refused to listen seriously to him and now to annoy him, she professed to wonder, as the blast of a freight engine whistle sounded at the moment through the hills, whether that might not be George Storm, one of her father's many engineers-a man to whom she had lately rendered a great and gratuitous service and about whom Seagrue himself had once tried to twit her. And it so chanced that it really was young Storm's train running by them for the passing track. He had orders to wait there for the directors' special.

Toward noon, Holmes and his guests, together with Helen, started for the station to meet the train. Its arrival was the occasion of many greetings for Helen from old New York friends who declared that the mountain sun and air had wrought wonders for the once delicate girl.

It was while she stood thus on the platform surrounded by her newly arrived guests that a young engineman crossed the platform, cap in hand. After a slight hesitation he walked up to her as if he would speak. Again, as if undecided, he halted just before Helen. She noticed the rather grimy appearance of the stalwart engineman, obviously just from his cab, but did not look closely enough to recognize him. If he was pausing, as he stood, for courage, it rose in him, for as her eyes returned to him, he stepped nearer to her: "I think it was you who saved my life the other day," he said somewhat haltingly. Then he questioningly held out his hand. "Will you accept my thanks?"

The moment he spoke, Helen knew him-it was Storm, the fireman of the freight wreck. Indeed, she remembered him almost too well. Her face flushed with embarrassment. Her guests, without catching what he had tors. Seven of them supported Presisaid, were critically inspecting the dent Holmes' proposal. smoked engineer. ments, to speak to her? She was quite innocent of false pride; but her friends could not possibly understand the situation and Storm with real western impulsiveness had chosen, it seemed, the most inopportune time possible to express his gratitude.

But there was his outstretched hand -should she ignore it? Anger swayed her-yet something within her, and something in Storm's eyes and his manner, pleaded against cutting him dead. With furiously red cheeks but sweeping aside the cost, Helen put out her hand. "It was nothing," she said quickly. "Do not think of it." Then she repaid Storm's impulsive stupidity, as she thought it deserved, by catching at something Seagrue was saying and failing to see Storm again. as a joke." The engineer had come up prepared found himself, in a fleeting second, already well launched on the social toboggan and shooting toward the bottom of a long hill. Seagrue, almost before Storm's back was turned, was laughing at Helen and pointing to her prints of the engineman's hand.

Questions and banterings from her companions contributed nothing tothrew it away. One pair of eyes watched the action closely; Storm, collecting his wits after his social disaster, noted what she had done. He was too philosophical to resent it. Instead, crossing the platform, when the party had driven away, he picked up the discarded glove and put it in his seen. As one of the cars whirled around a nearby corner Helen, looking back at the scene of her annoyance, saw Storm picking up something white; she knew it was her glove.

On reaching home-where the ladies were taken to their various rooms and the men went to their business-Helen, from her own room overlooking the passing track, watched the freight, bearing Storm, draw out and stop before the station for orders.

Turning to her glass more than once to see whether her cheeks were still as flushed as they felt, she was gratified to find that traces of her humiliation had disappeared. Her mind, Holmes' mind and called for prudence from which she had tried to dismiss the whole incident, was now as torate could be trusted, in the circum- by a rebellious curiosity concerning what she had seen happen on the distant platform when Storm crossed it to pick up her glove. As his frank eyes returned again and again to her imagination, something seemed to call her strongly, back to where he still was detained. She resisted longer; then surrendering to a sudden impulse, she ran downstairs, while her guests were disposing themselves, stepped into her racing car, drove to the station and alighting just as Storm came out of the telegraph office, she herself began to search at the edge of the platform for something. The engineer, after an interval, deliberately joined her.

> "You have lost something." Helen glanced up with affected surprise. "Nothing of moment. I missed a ring when I got home," she fabricated lightly; "and one of my gloves. I thought I might have dropped the one with the other here."

Storm's hand moved toward his blouse, then regaining his composure, he withdrew his hand, empty, and affected to search along the roadway with her. It was a brief duel of wits, but one in which the railroad man was no longer at a disadvantage. He was quite willing to search as long as she would linger and Helen, more than a little interested, was capricious and did linger until Storm's slow sentences began once more to bear too directly on the episode of the wreck and his gratefulness; then with a hasty goodby she started for home and Storm. climbing into his engine, pulled out with his long train.

General Holmes, in the meantime, with his two fealous groups of directo arrive with them at a mutually satisfactory settlement of the proposed stock issue. In reserving 30,000 shares of this for himself and his friends, Holmes had allotted 20,000 to Seagrue and his Wall street associates. This both Seagrue and Capelle had bluntly refused to accept, since the proposed line would work havoc with the through and local traffic of the Colorado and Coast road. Seagrue demanded instead an equal distribution of the new stock. Holmes and Rhinelander, after a long conference, put the motion fiatly to the eleven direc-

"That's no way to talk." "We will fight," echoed Capelle, equally wrought up. "Seagrue is right. If we are to be treated in this way we'll parallel your tracks!"

Rhinelander, Holmes and their associates tried in vain to pacify the two: their efforts were useless. Hard words passed and more threats were uttered; the meeting broke up in Seagrue and Capelle retired to an

Helen repassed the hall. Capelle nodded toward her. "There's your best bet, Seagrue. Holmes would give his son-in-law anything."

Seagrue looked glum. He hinted he lessly, but spurred by his friend's suggestion, he determined on a further effort. After luncheon he attempted to renew his addresses.

But there seemed about the selfwilled girl a certain barrier of independence, which, try as he would, he could never penetrate. "What's the matter, Helen?" he demanded at last. "You seem to take everything I say to open the safe. Upstairs, Helen, in slumber, was half-awakened by a whistle signal. Storm was bringing a freight train down the hill to wait for the midnight fiver. The rumble of passing trains rarely disturbed her. This night a much lighter but an unusual sound woke her completely. . She sat up a moment, listening. It seemed closesomeone was in the house. Turning on a light and dressing hastily, Helen opened the hall door of her room.

She had been careful not to make the slightest noise in her movements. Unfortunately the light behind her silhouetted her figure on the floor at the foot of the broad flight of stairs Spike, keen-eyed, in the library, saw it. He touched Hyde. "Douse it!" he muttered. Hoyde extinguished the light. The two paused, listened, walked into the hall and paused again. Then they started noiselessly up the stairs.

Guarded as they had been, Helen felt their presence. With fast-beating heart she ran to her window. Out in the night she could see the light of a torch. It was Storm's light, carried as he worked around his enhad already tried that out, and fruit- gine. Catching up a small serving bell she ran out on her balcony and tying the bell to the telephone wire that connected with the main line wires, she started the jingling messenger off for help.

The engineman, busy with his work, presently heard the slight jingle, but only to wonder for a moment what it could be. The two criminals had entered Helen's room. The instant she stepped in from the balcony they caught and overpowered her-stifled her screams, and in spite of her continuing struggles, rudely gagged her.

The bell again attracted Storm's attention, and he was puzzled to determine what it might mean. Looking toward's Helen's home he saw a bright light in one of the upper windows. Then, of a sudden, he saw more-silhouetted against the pane, a woman and a man were struggling. He alarmed the crew and ran swiftly up the hill for General Holmes' house

In the interval, leaving Helen helpless, the safe-blowers descended the stairs. Holmes and Rhinelander had likewise been awakened by the muffled sounds of the struggle and the two appeared in the upper hall. Seagrue joined them and with his uncle hurried into Helen's room, where she was trying to release herself. But her father, turning downstairs, had interrupted the two safe-blowers at the very library door. The old soldier

And with the shrubbery close to the gate, and the whining smile that marked his in the distance saw the headlight of face in argument, he continued: "Til the midnight passenger train. Seagrue listened with set face. The low-toned conference lasted longer. At its close the two separated. Shortly afterward, Capelle, in Seagrue's motor car, started rapidly for the city. At nearly twelve o'clock that nightsome time after the house was quiet-Sengrue, leaving his room, went down to the library. He unlocked the terrace doors. Capelle's men were outside. They entered and Seagrue led them before the safe. The criminal expert of the pair made hardly more than a pretense of dropping the tumblers for an opening. He had come prepared for any eventuality, and the two thugs, survey in hand, made their escape. They crossed the lawn gained blowers ran hard for the station and ed the running train as it slowed somewhat for the bridge,

In the confusion within the household Helen had been released. She had hysterically told her story and as she and her friends rushed downstairs she encountered Storm, who had helped her dazed father to a chair. "Are you hurt, daddy?" asked his daughter anxiously.

"No," he cried, "and I've given one of them a jolt he'll remember. But Helen!"-in his agitation he laid his hand heavily on his daughter's shoulder-"those damned scoundrels have got our survey!"

"Then they shall never get off with it," exclaimed Helen with flashing eyes. "We will catch them if it kills somebody." She gave her orders right and left

-for caring for her father, calling the police and for making the pursuit. The boarding of the moving passenger train by the two men had not escaped Storm's eyes, and a few words with Helen were enough to clear things. The fiyer was gone and the burglars with it, but there was a moment he saw the mechanism of the chance yet to get them. Hastening lock was unassailable he directed his with Storm down the hill, Helen told him the whole story. When the two reached the siding Storm asked the conductor to put out a flagman to protect the freight; he half lifted and half pushed Helen up into the cab, and the instant the fireman cut off the engine, started in pursuit of the fast-receding passenger train.

But the stern chase is the long chase. The freight engineer had set himself a difficult task; one thing alone was in his favor, everything else was against him. He was running a light engine against one pulling a strong string of sleeping cars. But his own machine was built for traction, not for speed, and he was pitting it against one of the fastest types of engines on the division. From the time Storm opened the throttle not a device was left untried to make his ponderous engine go fast; not a trick of all those that had already made his reputation as an exceptional runner was now overlooked and every resource of the engineer's art was brought into play to overhaul the flying passenger train.

Helen crouched on the fireman's box with her eyes straining ahead into the darkness, or glancing across the hooded lights of the cab at the profile of the silent engineer, waited in vain for him to look toward her. It seemed as if he had forgotten her existence. His attention, for the moment, was centered on nothing but the terrific headway he had attained and must maintain to win, and his reeling, thundering machine seemed awake to the relentless energy of its driver, was responding like a thing alive to his iron will. A cry from Storm made her look across toward him. She saw his eyes regarding her, but he was pointing silently ahead, and looking again through her own window, Helen's straining vision caught far ahead the faint gleam of the red tail-lights.

From the top of the distant sleeping cars Spike and Hyde had seen the threatening chase. Without a qualm, and crawling along the swaying cars, they made their way toward the engine. They held up the engineer and fireman. Spike understood enough of an engine to take the throttle and he tried to run away from Storm; but this proved a game in which he had no advantage. Striving desperately to increase his speed he found himself, as he glanced back from the cab window, steadily losing ground. The race was now more like the effort of a plow horse to run away from a thoroughbred. A last resort remained for the criminals. Hyde, at Spike's direction, climbed back over the tender and cut off the coaches. The engine pulled away from the train. The air went on and the string of sleepers stopped abruptly. Close behind them the freight engine was pounding and lurching. Storm had barely time to apply his air and pull up as he stopped and he was nearly into the hind-end of the observation

When the passenger crew got outside there were hurried explanations. Storm, knowing every foot of the line, saw that they had reached the longest passing track on the division and that by running around the stalled train he still had a chance to overtake his ing-track switch and tore past the "Don't go in there just now." standing cars after the fast disappearman at the throttle of the engine be-

But Spike, a powerful man, had almost for escape when Storm bore him down Olson Block to the earth. Helen ran up. "Where's. what you have stolen?" she cried furiously as Spike stood prisoner. Storm, Spike shrugged his shoulers, "I don't know what you're talking about," he muttered. "What do you fellows want with me, anyway?" he demanded, looking from one to the other of the two men, impudently.

They dragged him to the freight engine and with Storm directing, both engines started back to the passenger train. The freight engine sounded a greeting to the crew of the stranded flyer, and Storm and Helen clattered past to their own deserted train. With Storm speeding up at his throttle Helen soon saw the semaphore of Signal station and with the two prisoners. Storm and his fireman returned with Helen to the house.

Police officers were already in charge and the safe-blowers were turned over to them. Helen, agitated and anxious, was met at the door of the library by Amos Rhinelander. His face was grave. TIGERS HAD GREAT WRECKING CREW

Crawford, Cobb and Veach Were Stars In This Respect.

FIRST LED IN RUN DRIVING

Third Member of Detroit Hard Hitting Outfield Was Greatest Clouter In American League - Twenty-two Players Each Batted In Fifty or More

What a wonderful and powerful wrecking crew Detroit possesses is evtdenced by the fact that last season its three members-Sam Crawford, Bob Veach and Ty Cobb-ranked first, second and third respectively in the American league in driving in runs. It was the third year in nine the one time Red had excelled in timely hitting, 1910 and 1914 having been the other seasons Wahoo Sam was the mauling monarch of the Johnsonites. Cobb grabbed off the honors in 1907, 1908, 1909 and 1911, while Frank Baker annexed the laurels in 1912 and 1913,

The greatest number of tallies ever batted in in one season by an American leaguer is 144, Cobb whanging over this total in 1911, when he moved at his swiftest pace. Crawford, this year's leader, knocked home 116 counters. Bob Veach, the other century plant. drove in 115. Cobb, ranking third, was responsible for 95 markers. John Collins, ranking fourth, was Chicago's timeliest hitter, with 87 runs batted in.

That the western clubs harbored the filters is shown by the fact that they furnish eight men to the supposititious timely hitting team, which would have Sisler of St. Louis and Schalk of Chieago in the points, John Collins of Chicago on first, I'ratt of St. Louis on second, Gardner of Boston on third, Chapman of Cleveland at short, Veach of Detroit in left, Cobb of Detroit in center and Crawford of Detroit in right. These nine men added the finishing touches to 696 runs, or forty-six more than Detroit, hardest hitting team on the younger circuit, was able to bat home. The club with the weakest at tack was St. Louis, the Browns ham mering in 440 counters. The White Elephants hit in 400, the Yankees 461, the Senators 464, the Indians 475, the Red Sox 559 and the White Sox 507.

Twenty-two players each batted in fifty or more runs last season, Chicago having five of these men. Detroit four, Boston four, Cleveland three, Washington two. New York two. Philadelphia one and St. Louis one. Dick Hoblitzell, former Redleg, was one of the twenty-two men who drove in more than tifty tallies, the list of the athletes being as follows:

116 Runs-Crawford, Detroit.

115 Runs-Veach, Detroit. & Runs-Cobb, Detroit. 57 Runs-J. Collins, Chicago. 55 Runs-Fournier, Chicago.

10 Runs-Lewis, Boston, and Pratt, St. Louis.
78 Runs-E. Collins and Jackson, Chi-

70 Runs-Smith, Cleveland. dit, Washington.

64 Runs-Lajole, Philadelphia. @ Runs-Speaker, Boston. 61 Runs-Gardner, Poston. @ Runs-Hoblitzell, Boston. 58 Runs-Pipp, New York.

56 Runs-Burns, Detroit. 53 Runs-Felsch, Chicago, and Hartsell. Runs-Roth, Cleveland.

PIMPLY? WELL, DON'T BE!

People Notice It. Drive Them Off With Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

A pimply face will not embarrass you much longer if you get a package of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets. The skin should begin to clear after you have taken the tablets a few nights.

Cleanse the blood, the bowels and the liver with Olive Tablets.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are the successful substitute for calomel—there's never any sickness or pain after taking them.

never any sickness or pain after taking them.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do that which calomel does, and just as effectively, but their action is gentle and safe instead of severe and irritating.

No one who takes Olive Tablets is ever cursed with "a dark brown taste," a bad breath, a dull, listless, "no good" feeling, constipation, torpid liver, bad disposition or pimply face.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets are a purely vegetable compound mixed with olive oil; you will know them by their oilve color.

Dr. Edwards spent years among patients afflicted with liver and bowel complaints, and Olive Tablets are the inguensely effective result.
