What's Going to Happen in England After the Conflict

UNITED PRESS CORRESPONDENT TELLS WHAT RESULTS OF WAR WILL BE ON GREAT BRITAIN'S RESOURCES, METHODS AND INSTITUTIONS—TAXATION BURDEN WILL BE TWICE AS HEAVY—FREE TRADE PRINCIPLE MUST VANISH AFTER WAR.

(By Chas. P. Stewart)
 United Press Staff Correspondent
 London, March 12. (By Mail).—
 Europe will have to do one of two things after the war:
 First—Accept a far lower standard of living than heretofore, or Second—Cancel all war debts and start afresh with a clean slate.
 It is impossible to calculate, for instance, what England's war debt alone will be, because nobody knows how much longer the war will last. Certainly, however, the figure will be so enormous as to stagger the imagination.
 Even if the struggle should end before 1917 the English would have to pay annually, in interest, more than the total of their government's year-by-year ante-bellum expenses.
 Taxation was high before the war. How is the country going to stand a burden more than twice as heavy?
 For one thing, economists say, production will have to be greatly increased.
 This they expect, will be accomplished by the use of improved machinery, by a higher degree of efficiency than in the past and by the employment of great numbers of women who were not industrial factors before war broke out.

 These economists themselves, however, do not pretend the difference will be made up thus. Taxes must be much heavier to cover the deficit.
 The only conclusion is that industrial England will be compelled to work more than twice as hard as before the war, for less pay.
 Possibly because they are themselves heavy investors in the allied war loans, the English propertied classes, even the small fry, generally strongly oppose a wiping out of the war indebtedness and insist that whatever new and harder conditions may come, should be accepted cheerfully.
 But will they? Apparently there is considerable room for doubt.
 The creditor element, though influential, is in a hopeless minority, of course.
 There are plenty of hints that the majority will not respond enthusiastically to the suggestion that the masses accept, after the war, even shorter commons than they had to make the best of before the war's outbreak.

 It is fair to say that some enlightened liberals, including a number of men who have subscribed liberally to the war loans, are disposed at least to consider the idea of cancelling these obligations.
 They do not use the word "repudiation." They say the country's foreign indebtedness, which, however, is small compared with what Englishmen have loaned to their own government must be paid. But it may prove expedient, they admit, to regard loans made to the national war chest by the English themselves as contributions from those best able to afford them.
 Some take the position that England's loans to her allies should similarly be wiped out.
 Adoption of such a scheme obviously would mean the unique situation of a war burden falling on the rich instead of the poor.
 At the same time that it would mean a heavy loss for the "classes" it would also mean a gain for the "masses," a levelling-up process historically unprecedented.
 Higher taxes?
 Before the war the average English skilled workman made from $8 to $11 weekly. The corresponding workman in Germany made from $6 to $7.
 For a man with a family it might seem as if these figures were pretty near bed rock, that he couldn't reduce his standard of living without starving to death.

As a matter of fact, the workers in Spain, Portugal, Russia and Turkey were not so well off as the English and Germans; and a coolie's wages in China amount to about 70 cents American money, for a 7-day week.

So, after all, there is a good deal of room for European labor to be worse off after than it was before, the war.

The creditor classes' suggestion of "a lower standard of living" isn't by any means an impossibility, if the producing classes will submit to it.

Will they? Nobody knows yet.

In England, land reform appears to be a certainty.

It is not contended that the British Isles would support their population, agriculturally, except perhaps with the closest pinching. It is maintained, however, that a just distribution of land would check the tendency toward such an intense concentration in the cities, with its consequent disorganization of the labor market and frightful conditions of unemployment which characterized ante-bellum days.

It is an old complaint that, with millions of the English on the verge of starvation, huge areas of land have been held as game preserves and parks, in as primitive a state of uncultivation as at the time of the Norman conquest.

Still other vast tracts have been farmed only by tenants who, while doing all the work, were allowed only the most meager livelihoods, that the landlords might get the lion's share of the country's products by virtue of nothing but their monopoly.

In the cities conditions have been and still are the same as in the country, with only such variations as necessarily go with urban life.

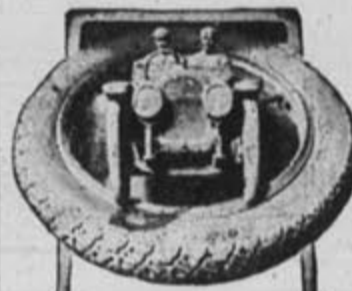

All this, it is generally agreed, will have to be changed with the soldiers' return home at the war's end. It is recognized that hundreds of thousands of men who have had a taste of a broader existence than the old one, will not tolerate a return to the former order of things.

The suggestion most frequently heard is that the landlords will be forced to dispose of their great holdings at reasonable prices, on some such basis as the one already prevailing in Ireland. Others favor a more or less close approximation to the Single Tax.

Taking into account the relief this will affect in labor congestion in the industrial centers, and the fact that there undoubtedly will be a heavy emigration to the colonies, it seems fair to predict an immense betterment in the masses' lot in Postbellum England.

England inevitably will cease to be a free trade country after the war. Reciprocity will prevail between the mother country and her colonies. It may include all the present allies. The tariff's purpose will be, partly, revenue. More particularly it will be for protection against Germany. The English policy is not, in general, for protection against neutrals, but it is hard to see how it can be avoided in this case, as Germans might otherwise establish their factories in neutral countries, get their raw material from home and set the protection program at naught.

Already plans are under discussion for preventing the employing class from getting the benefit, to the workers' disadvantage, of the higher prices it is expected this tariff will mean.

One suggestion is for a minimum wage. This is not very generally favored, however. Its opponents say it is too inelastic a method to work satisfactorily. It is unlikely it will be adopted.

Another proposition looks toward a profit sharing system, so scientifically worked out that price increases will automatically mean correspondingly larger incomes for workingmen.

A still more radical scheme contemplates government control, or even government ownership, of all manufacturing industries.

Inasmuch as the tariff will have to be imposed with labor's consent and aid, there is no question that labor's interests will have to be duly considered. Indications are that the result's form may be more or less socialistic.

It is a pretty safe prediction that the war is going to be followed by important internal changes in most, if not all the belligerent and even in neutral Europe today than there was before the war. If this condition should become chronic, of course the war's result can be set down as entirely bad.

If plutocracy succeeds in getting a still tighter stranglehold on the people than it had before, things will be all the worse.

The people seem to realize this, however, and are pretty watchful.

So it looks as if the odds favor changes in the line of improvement, a big improvement and soon, at least in spots.

Are revolutions likely? Peaceful economic revolutions?—Yes, very likely indeed.

But an overturning of governments? Of some, maybe; not all.

There is hardly a suggestion of such a thing in England. The situation is said to be the same in France.

British officials believe that a complete governmental overturning is a distinct possibility in the case of the central powers, perhaps so soon as to shorten the war. The Italian government's position was notoriously precarious long before the war began. There is no reason for believing it is less so today.

Curiously enough, the Russian regime, supposedly the most unpopular with the people of any in Europe, appears to have been enormously strengthened by the world struggle. All accounts indicate its entire safety for the present, though there is a general belief that its post-bellum methods, largely with the ruling class' approval, will be greatly liberalized.

SHERMAN'S MARCH TO SEA, SHOWN IN "BIRTH OF A NATION"

Quite the most wonderful of the many wonderful scenes in "The Birth of a Nation" is that showing Sherman's march to the sea and the burning of the City of Atlanta. Imagine, if you can, a view of a long, fertile valley extending for miles. Moving through this valley, in straggling formation, or lack of formation, is the army of General Sherman. The view is so extensive that the soldiers appear but little larger than ants, yet the reproduction is so clear that the form of each man is perfectly delineated.

Now and then a puff of smoke indicates return fire upon snipers in farm buildings. Now and then a barn is fired in evident retaliation for a deadly bullet from its shelter, and the army of human ants is ever moving forward, wriggling its way like a huge serpent towards its goal—the sea. Atlanta is reached. Whether the burning of the city was a military necessity, or whether the conflagration was of accidental origin, Atlanta was sacrificed to the flames, and the conflagration is so realistically pictured in "The Birth of a Nation" that one can almost smell the smoke, and hear the cries of the terrified people as they flee to the hills for their lives. Few make any attempt to save household effects, so great is their haste to escape the flames and the hated Yankees. It is a wonderful picture in very truth. Nothing like it has ever appeared on the screen, and it took a vast amount of labor and infinite patience to stage such a spectacle.

If Delta County Votes "DRY"

It is my judgment—

That economy and efficiency in municipal management should result in lower rather than a higher tax.

That money now wasted over the saloon bars of the County will work marvelously to the advantage of both buyer and seller as it finds its way through legitimate stores and shops.

That places of employment will open to all those now in the service of the Liquor traffic who can qualify—work is plentiful in Escanaba.

That many of the "shaeks" on Ludington street will be replaced with buildings of the Semer Block Type.

That sobriety will strengthen the church—will make for peace, prosperity and happiness in the homes of the community.

As the Liquor traffic is a menace to all that is good, true and virtuous, as it is a breeder of crime, poverty, suffering, sin and death, as it stands opposed to all that is decent, clean and right.

I cordially invite you to vote "yes" next Monday and thus banish the saloon from our County.

T. M. JUDSON.
