Two Girls Walk From Chicago to Homes in Norway; Took Them 14 Days to Make the Trip; Given Dog

Hiking is not such a hard sport when you are used to it, but the first hundred miles are the hardest, according to the views of Miss Bertha Gustafson and Miss Clara Johnson, who arrived in Norway at 10 o'clock Saturday night after walking from Chicago. The homes of both girls are in Norway.

The trip did not originate through a contest, although several minor wagers were made after the two had announced their intention of traveling from the Windy City to Norway, a distance well over 200 miles.

And did they enjoy the hike? Every minute spent near them, they say, but during those "pretty near" enjoyable minutes a seat in a Pullman car seemed the means of comfort and happiness.

Took Two Weeks

The trip took two weeks, the girls leaving Chicago June 26. The first three of four days they averaged thirty-five but later on their speed slumped and toward the last of the journey they were walking about seventeen miles a day.

Only once did they get or take a ride and that was through Iron City, Ill. where their attire made it necessary for them to seek concealment while passing through the realm of William Glenn Voliva. In order to facilitate walking, the girls wore boy scout suits. Each carried a fifteen pound pack outside of Zion City their clothing was perfectly proper, but in it well the styles of 1899 are still the reigning fad in that peculiar Illinois town.

The girls did not camp along the route, but always managed to reach a town where they spent the night. During the trip they were presented with a white shepherd dog by a farmer and the animal is still with them.

They will not hike back, the one-way trip by foot having proved enough.

HENRY FORD TO RUN FIRST LOG THROUGH BIG MILL

Everything Ready for His Arrival; Saws Were Tried Out Saturday.

IRON MOUNTAIN, July 13.—Henry Ford himself will guide the first log through the saws of the Iron Mountain mill, it was announced at the company's offices here. E. G. Knapp, vice-president of the Michigan Iron, Lumber and Lumber company, telegraphed Mr. Ford Saturday inviting him to be here for the mill opening, but so far no reply has been received.

Everything at the mill is ready for his arrival. Saws were raised in one of the boilers Friday, and Saturday a log was put through the band mill to make sure that everything was in working order. According to M. Cunningham, superintendent, the machines worked as if they had been running for six months.

It is planned to have a fine birdseye maple log run through by Mr. Ford, and the lumber will be sawed up into small pieces for souvenirs. The edger will be working, and the trimmer may be. The lumber will be run through both at any rate.

The force was kept at work all day Sunday getting things in readiness, and final tests and tryouts were being made today.

Leadership is a Sacred Trust—

"Comparative Prices Must Go!"

We never quote "comparative prices." The integrity of the spoken and written word of the J. C. PENNEY COMPANY is now as it always has been, a sacred trust.

The plain, straight-forward statement of our ability to buy in great quantities, quality merchandise at low prices is taken by millions of people as an honestly stated fact worthy of confidence.

In this policy of not quoting "comparative prices" we have been leaders for years.

Others now follow our leadership—a number of the greater stores of the West and Middle-West recently announced in their newspaper advertising that "the use of comparative prices would hereafter be discontinued because it is misleading, exaggerated and destructive of public confidence."

From the beginning, our policy has been a simple, sound Golden Rule policy—and every person connected with the J. C. PENNEY COMPANY takes just pride in sustaining a leadership that is and always will be a sacred trust!

GET SOMETHING DONE

It is to be assumed that Dr. Thomas W. Salmon, of New York, a colonel in the medical corps of the army during the war, spoke only after due deliberation when he told the senate investigating committee that four hundred ex-soldiers committed suicide in New York state last year and that most of them would be alive today if they had been given proper attention.

The condition of the soldiers directly pictures the hideous, larger picture he conjures up as still more dreadful. It through its neglect, this country has forced four hundred men in one state to seek at their own hands the death they escaped at the hands of the Germans, for how many more self-murderers is it responsible in the other forty-seven states? How many thousands of young men, the best and bravest of the country, have been driven to their graves or allowed to die unhealed for in the last twelve months? There is no way to measure the extent of the tragedy, nor is it a pleasant thing to think about.

But the record of the last year and the condition of the disabled veterans at this point must be thought of, not unless the present indeterminate discussions are terminated. The record of the coming twelve months is going to be worse than the record of the twelve months just gone, and we are going to have on our hands a deplorable disgrace and scandal.

Inquiry is all very well. Let it keep on where necessary, but the condition of the sick and wounded veterans is known to the whole nation. There is no mystery about it. It is a matter of common knowledge that veterans in many cases are treated with almost as little consideration as they would have received in German prison camps.

A UNIFORM TRAFFIC LAW

Commissioner Vandenberg, of the department of public safety, announces that he will prepare a traffic law for all the cities and villages of Michigan and submit it to the legislature for adoption.

At present there is no uniformity except by chance. Each community is a law unto itself and traffic regulations are adopted by each town according to its own sweet will. There are few differences in local conditions which require special local laws. For the most part one Michigan village repeats the conditions of every other village and a law that is good for one is good for all of them.

Possibly local pride, local prejudice or something still less admirable than either will stand in the way of the adoption of the commissioner's plan in some places, but it would seem that there is enough good sense in Michigan to make a success of the attempt. Even those communities which think that they have a perfect traffic law ought to be willing to take something less than their ideal for the sake of uniformity. A uniform law will be better observed than the present local laws, because every experienced driver will know it and, furthermore, when a general law is violated rigorous punishment may be inflicted without injustice, while the necessary ignorance of tourists gives them a fair, if not a legal, excuse for infractions of local laws.

STARTING RIGHT

A dispatch from Berlin says the Russian government has ordained that a pound of rye shall be considered a unit of value and used in trade like money.

The beginning of trade in an unregulated and miscellaneous barter. Next custom establishes certain articles as mediums of exchange and primitive communities have used many articles for that purpose. Skins, shells, beads and baubles are illustrations.

In Russia through the breakdown of the old system and the deliberate inflation of paper money until it lost all value has reached the point where the trade devices of the savage and the pioneer are all that is left. But the resort to packages of rye as substitutes for small coins is sound financing as far as it goes for it is out of such methods that better methods have grown. If the Russian government has adopted rye for money it has abandoned theory and got back to a basis of experience.

The ex-kaiser doesn't want to pay property and income taxes in Holland. Why doesn't he go to England and see how they will treat him there?

The London Opinion remarks that many Americans who made a point of laying up something for a rainy day wish they had laid up something for a dry one. A lot of them did, but they are not telling about it.

It is reported that somebody in New York has developed a brand of cider that does not ferment until it has been swallowed. Add to the paraphernalia of each dry agent one first-class stomach pump.

If the country buys its coal now, the price is likely to come down later; if the country holds back now, the price is likely to stay up. You get it coming and going.

Having made $300,000 by committing assault and battery on Georges Carpentier, it is probable Jack Dempsey will not object to paying any reasonable police court fine.

Sometime one of these prophets who are continually announcing the end of the Lloyd George premiership is going to guess right. Everything comes to an end ultimately.

CHAPTER X
The Hour Before the Mutiny
'How did it happen, Michael?'
As he spoke Dyck looked round the forecabin of the Ariadne with a restless and inquisitive expression.

'How Did It Happen, Michael?'

'The night you got a letter from Virginia we was penniless; so at last I went with my watch to the pawn-brokers. You said you'd wait till I got back, though you knew you were a goldfish. When I got back, you were still brooding. I was seated at a table in the chef's lounge when you had read the letter. It's not for me to say what you were thinking, but I could guess. You'd been struck hard, and there had come to you a letter from one who meant more to you than all the rest of the world; and you wouldn't answer it because things weren't right. As I stood looking at you, wonderin' what to do, though I had twice shifted in my pocket from the watch I'd pawned, there came four men, and I knew from their looks they were recruits of the navy. I saw what was in their eyes. They knew—as you should know when they saw a gentleman like you in pawnshop clothes—that neck had been a bit of us.

'What the end would have been I don't know. It was you that saved the problem, not them. You looked at the first man of them hard. Then you got to your feet.

'I do not know the story of the killing, even as it was told in court. Well, some one killed the man, but not you, and the truth will come out in time. If one should come to me out of the courts of heaven and say that there it was declared you were a rogue, I should say heaven was no place for me. No, of one thing I am sure—you never killed an unfortunel man, Wayward, cunning, reckless, dissipated you may have been, but you were never depraved—never.'

'Well, I'm the dregs of the world, Michael. I'm the supreme dregs.'
Somehow the letter from Virginia had decided Dyck Calhoun's fate for him. Here he was—at sea, a common sailor in the navy. He and Michael Cloues had eaten and drunk as sailors do, and they had realized that, as they ate and drank on the River Thames, they would not eat and drink on the watery fairway. They had seen the tank foul with age, from which water was drawn for men who could not live without it, and the smell of it had retorted Dyck's senses. They had seen the kegs of pickled meat, and they had been told of the evil ration given to the sailors at sea.

The months he had spent between his exit from prison and his entrance into the Ariadne had roughened, though not coarsened, Dyck's outward appearance. From his first appearance among the seamen he had shown himself to be more their leader. His enlistment was for three years, and he meant that these three should prove the final success of this naval enterprise, of the stark period in a calendar of tragedy.

The life of the sailor, with its change and drudgery, its inadequate pay, its self-sufficing food, his meagery brood, its beer drawn from casks that once had held oil or fish, its stinking salt-meat barrels, the hideous stench of the bilge-water—all this could in one sense be no worse than his sufferings in jail. In spite of self-control, jail had been to him the degradation of his hopes, the humiliation of his manhood. He had suffered cold, dampness, fever, and indigestion there, and it had sapped the fresh fiber of his life.

From the moment Dyck arrived on board the Ariadne he was a marked man. Ferens, a distinguished solicitor, who knew his story, spent the whole of his spare time in the forecabin, and he received attention at once offensive and flattering. The best educated of the ship's hands approached him on the grievances which which the whole navy was stirring.

'You're new among us,' said Ferens to Dyck. 'You don't quite know what we've been doing, I suppose. Some of us have been in the navy for two years, and some for ten. There are men on this ship who could tell you stories that would make your blood run cold—take my word for it. There's a lot of things goin' on that oughtn't to be goin' on. The time has come for reform.'

'Things are movin', and we've got to take our stand now when the time is ripe for it, or else lose it forever. Over at Spithead they're gettin' their own way. The government are goin' to send the admiralty board down here, because our admirals says to them that it won't be safe unless they do.'

'What's the game of the feet at the Navy?'
Ferens replied in a low voice: 'Our men are goin' to send out petitions—to the admiralty and to the house of commons.'

'You're with us aren't you? You see the sailors we've suffered, and how bad it will be. Yet you haven't been on a voyage with us. You've only tasted the life in prison. Good God, this life is heaven to what we have at sea. We don't mind the fighting. We'd rather fight than rot. An evil grin covered his face for a minute. 'Yes, we'd rather fight than rot for the stuff we get to eat is better food, God knows! Do you ever think what the life of the sailor is, this coming at the top of a mast with the first breeze his very soul, and because he's slow, owing to the cold, gets twenty lashes for not being quicker? Well, I've seen that, and a head-light it is. Did you ever see a man flogged? It isn't a very slight thing. First, the back takes the click of the whip like a drum was heard, and you see the redness run and go purple and red, and the man has his teeth knocked clean out of him with every blow. Nearly every stroke takes off the skin and draws the blood, and a dozen will make the back a ditch of murder. Then the shipper stops, looks at the lashes, feels them tender like and out and down it comes again. When all the back is ridged and scarred, the flesh, that looked clean and beautiful, becomes a bloody mass. Some men get a hundred lashes, and that's torture and death.'

Rough on Irving
Sir Henry Irving used to tell an amusing story about himself. He asked the cabman who used to take him to the theater if he had ever seen him act. The man replying in the negative, Irving gave him money to buy seats for himself and his wife.

Lovelier Fabrics for a Lovelier Summer

WAS there ever a Summer when you needed so many clothes? Or when fabrics were so tempting—the prints with their prim little patterns, organdies deliciously colored, dotted swisses like mounds of snow, and crepes, voiles and mulls soft as cobwebs? Just as you are sighing a bit wistfully, our piece-goods department surprises everybody with sweeping values. Not to be outdone, our pattern counter makes known a wonderful new invention—

BABY CAMEL ONE OF BARNES SHOW GREAT FEATURES

One of the most valued possessions of the A. G. Barnes big ring wild animal show, which comes to Escanaba Thursday, July 22, is a baby camel, the only one of its kind in this country.

The camel was ushered into this world in the Pacific ocean on board a ship which brought to the United States the first shipment of wild animals to arrive since the World War ended. All of these animals were obtained by trainers sent to Africa by Mr. Barnes as soon as the armistice was signed.

The young camel is described as being so ugly that it is really attractive looking. Like a jiff it is built on lines striking for their clumsiness, the legs and ears being predominant. Mr. Barnes has not as yet named his newest unit, and hundreds of suggestions have been received in the few days that have elapsed since its arrival in this country, so that it would not be difficult for him to decide upon a proper appellation.

Camels and elephants born in captivity rarely live over a year or two, but Mr. Barnes has hopes that his unexpected addition to the camel section of his menagerie will shatter traditions in this respect.

The baby camel takes naturally to the circus parade, according to a word reported from the show, but carries its motherly instincts of worry by insisting upon taking its own sweet time in leaving the stable, being frequently a half an hour behind the schedule as a result of them. The baby camel will be seen in the Barnes' parade, which will start Thursday, and will be the centerpiece of the circus.

performed the ceremony in the presence of relatives and close friends. A reception was held at the home of Rev. and Mrs. C. A. Lund following the ceremony.

Tonight the couple will leave on a wedding trip to points south and on their return they will make their home at 112 South Fifteenth street.

Monthly Supper. The regular monthly supper will be given by the Baptist ladies. Aid society at the home of Mrs. E. A. Hubbard, on South Eighth street, at 5 o'clock on Friday afternoon. Mrs. Hubbard will be assisted by Mrs. Fodet and Mrs. Graham.

Gronblad-Moorehouse. Miss Henrietta Gronblad, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. E. Gronblad of this city and W. Stanley Moorehouse of Little, N. Y., were united in marriage last Saturday evening at 7 o'clock at the Episcopal church. Ann Arson, M. H. The Rev. Dr. Henry Tatlock performed the ceremony.

Dinner Dance. Members of the Escanaba Golf Club were entertained at a dinner dance at the club on Tuesday evening. The Misses W. J. Cox, W. A. Olson and A. French were the hostesses.

Merchant Sends Letter Telling Closing Views

(Continued From Page One) I was the first merchant in Escanaba who suggested six o'clock closing of stores on all evenings in the week except Wednesday and Saturday and I was instrumental in having that policy adopted generally.

I had the necessary petition sent in closing at six o'clock, Wednesday evenings and on holidays and Sundays.

I had among the list of "Humanity's" stores, the names of several that will keep open part time on Sundays and holidays.

I also try to draw attention to the fact that the business of Escanaba would be very profitable if the Fair Store gave its employees and managers the same facilities, free transportation and better living conditions. For Escanaba is the only store in Escanaba that pays the transportation of its employees.

As a conclusion let me say that I am hoping the six o'clock closing you are now discussing a shining full day.
