ROTARIANS REPRESENT THE LARGEST LUNCHEON CLUB IN THE WORLD; KIWANIS IS NEXT

First Rotary Club Was Launched On February 23, 1905.

Service, Not Self, He Profits Most Who Serves Best" Is Rotarians Motto.

NEW YORK, Aug. 4.—The luncheon club idea is a means of cultivating the spirit of brotherhood and cooperation among business and professional men, rapidly spreading throughout the United States and Canada.

Those clubs today in all sections of North America are aiding in the problems of reconstruction and are promoting the principles of good government and good citizenship and are promising to become great business building organizations.

Since the birth of the luncheon club idea in Chicago February 23, 1905, when the first group of Rotarians launched their organization two other international associations have been formed—the Lions and the Kiwanis which together with the Rotary have a total membership of nearly 150,000 divided into 1500 different clubs.

Taking as its slogan, "Service, not Self—He profits most who serves best," the Rotary Club has become the largest of these luncheon clubs having 800 clubs with a membership of more than 16,000 of the representative business and professional men of the country.

The Rotarians urge the Golden Rule in business dealings and their objects are set forth as follows:

To promote the recognition of the importance of all legitimate occupations and to dignify each member's occupation as affording him an opportunity to serve society.

To encourage high ethical standards in business and professions.

To increase the efficiency of each member by the development of improved ideas and business methods.

To stimulate the desire of each member to be of service to his fellow men and society in general.

To promote the spending of acquaintance as an opportunity for service and an aid to success.

To enliven the interest of each member in the public welfare of his community and to cooperate with others in civic, social and industrial development.

The international headquarters of the Rotary Club is at Chicago and its officers are: Crawford C. McCullough, Fort William, Canada, president; Ralph W. Ommings, Lancaster, Pa., first vice-president; William C. Copper, Colgate Bluff, Ia., second vice-president; H. J. Luther Stark, Orange, Tex., third vice-president; Rufus F. Chapin, Chicago, treasurer.

The second luncheon club association to be founded—the International Kiwanis Club—was organized at Detroit January 1, 1915, by a group of business men who took as their name one of Indian origin, which stands for the observance of the Golden Rule in private, civic, social and business life.

The Kiwanis also aim to promote the spirit of fraternalism among business and professional men and one of its main objects is to "discuss and study the science of business building and to promote co-operation between its members in the development of the various lines they represent."

Many children innocently cheated out of the very food they need daily

Everyone knows that health is the most valuable asset of life. From birth to maturity is the "construction period."

A robust and healthy child will usually develop into a vigorous man or woman. But malnutrition will invariably hamper normal growth and when the child reaches maturity he or she is anemic, poorly nourished and liable to disease.

Many children today are innocently cheated out of the very foods they need. Some parents, either through lack of knowledge, or carelessness, do not provide those foods which strengthen and nourish the growing child.

It is the duty of parents to think for the child in these matters.

Grape-Nuts, the well-known food made of whole wheat flour and malted barley, served with milk or cream, is one of the most nutritious foods in the world. It provides the elements necessary to nutrition and is a balanced food.

Quite aside from its superior nutritive value, is its delicious appetite appeal. Especially attractive with fresh fruits or preserves.

Grape-Nuts is served and sold everywhere—in leading hotels and restaurants; at lunch counters; in every good grocery store in every city, town or village in the United States. Where you can't find Grape-Nuts—you won't find people.

Telexgrams From Russia Are Not Easy to Receive

July 1. Although Russia has been in open telegraphic communication with the outside world for only one year since the Russian-Polish and various other trade associations were established, few telegrams ever come out of Russia in response to the thousands that are sent in by officials of the telegraph administration or Russian Royal. Most of the telegrams are routed through these two cities which are in direct communication with Moscow and Petrograd.

We have a good deal of done business in connection with our present difficulties from America and elsewhere to Moscow and other Russian ports," said an official of the Russian department. Telegrams by the hundreds have been sent to Russia with answers yet paid for very few of the answers have come.

Only certain persons are allowed to originate in Russia. It is understood here, and to gain the privilege of originating takes much time, during which the person is subjected to a complete investigation as to the reason he could possibly want to telegraph.

IT MAY be presumptuous to compare any story with the immortal "Treasure Island," but there is a real basis for it here, for the narrative does deal with treasure, pirates and a Pacific island in an uncommonly delightful way.

In thrills, it must yield to its great predecessor; in humor, it is at least a good second; in variety and up-to-dateness, it has the advantage.

It is a real treasure hunt with the unique quality, giving rise to delicious humor, that the hunters are led by women. It is a genuine treat.

GREATER STATE FAIR IN MAKING

This Year's Exhibits Expected to Exceed 1920 Record; Horse Show Feature

Just one month from Tuesday the gates at the state fair grounds will be thrown open for the seventh annual annual exhibition of the Michigan state fair. The big show will last for three weeks, 100 days and nights, starting Friday, September 2, and ending the night of Sunday, September 11.

An increase all along the line in premium awards to be paid exhibitors and in the variety of exhibits are announced for the 1921 fair by Secretary-Manager G. W. Dickinson. He says the fair's 21 departments measure up well to the record set by the principal exhibits this year, but headed by Commissioner H. H. and the fair's a whole lot larger. Halliday, and this powerful department expects that it will give it every advantage. When it took midwestern title as the most state department, that of agriculture, and the agricultural fair in particular, John Baird, director, will put on a wild life exposition during the fair that will show the wild animals native to Michigan.

The 1921 horse building contest will be held ready for this year's fair, and will provide quarters for 100 entries. This addition will permit the old horse building to be used in displays of every activity in the fair, cattle and hog sales, sheep, etc., Secretary-Manager Dickinson claims. He always anticipates, will also promises an entertainment program by facilities for all livestock, a grand that will include horse races, balloon flights, etc. The new grandstand will be devoted to displays of craft fireworks, spectacles, and scores of other features.

A landslide caused by torrential rains destroyed two villages in Italy. The peculiar feature of the slide was that it moved so slowly that the inhabitants were able to escape, but as it moved so slowly, the houses and vineyards were all stuck down, this year's harvest is ruined.

A NAVAL TRUCE

In the course of a clear discussion of the disalmantlement conference a London correspondent of the Associated Press sums the problem up in a few words. He says:

Fighting ships are built to make war; war is an instrument of state policy. Clearly limitation of naval armament, which means building fewer or no more fighting ships, can only be accepted if the three powers feel that the danger of war has been averted and since war is an instrument of policy the danger of war can be disregarded only if the states policies of Britain, America and Japan should be harmonized, or should this prove impossible, if two of the powers can make clear to a weaker third that they are united in opposition to a trouble-making power.

A very nearly, but not quite true. There is a road to at least a temporary agreement upon limitation of naval armament which does not rest upon either a harmonization of state policies or upon a combination of two powers against the third. The best solution, of course, would be one which rests upon complete harmony but if there is no agreement upon policy there can be agreement upon the evident fact that the three powers simply cannot afford at this time to spend the enormous sums that would be demanded by unlimited competition in building navies.

For many years the three powers lived in peace without naval competition and they might attempt to do the same thing again for a limited time under an agreement to maintain a fixed status. Such an arrangement would be in the nature of a truce which would leave questions of policy to be agreed upon at the necessity arose, just as they have been agreed upon in the past.

An agreement of this kind would be precarious and hence unsatisfactory, but it would be better than nothing and might be the beginning of a process that would end in complete accord.

SOLDIERS AND POLITICS

From Lansing comes the news that a new organization of war veterans is forming there which, according to its projectors, will be the very opposite of those soldiers' organizations which seek to accomplish their purposes entirely outside of the political world. This new organization is to get into Michigan politics.

It is safe to say that this feature of the policy of the new organization will not prove to be best for the soldiers or best for the state.

The great majority of the men who served in the war are upstanding, independent-thinking Americans. They have ideas of their own and politically they are for the United States of America and every good citizen in it. They are Republicans, Democrats, Socialists, and some of them entertain all the shades of opinion that lie between and beyond these parties. Such men vote for their principles because they believe it is right to vote that way.

They do not vote for special causes and interests because in the long run the interest of every man is bound up with the interest of the whole and patriotism sees the country as a whole.

If this country should change its mind about that principle and adopt the other policy the result would be a complete realignment into classes and interests instead of an alignment on general principles and policies of government. Every man for himself would be the rule of political action and the rest of that ancient motto would follow as a logical consequence.

This country has never approved that motto. You notice that a century it has shaped its political conduct upon the principles which guide it today and no great country has made an equal success of the art of government in that time.

AFTER SEVEN YEARS

Accounts of the German observance of the seventh anniversary of the beginning of the war emphasize the conduct of two extreme parties. On one side was a great gathering in Berlin of the forces opposed to war. They carried banners referring to the "Great War Murder" and called out for the end of all war. Against them was a sprinkling of monarchists who cheered the Kaiser and called the pacifists dogs and swine.

What the great mass of the people were doing and saying does not appear from the dispatches, but it is not likely that they were dreaming of eternal peace or turning their eyes back to the deceptive prosperity and content that were theirs eight years ago. The monarchists' slogan, "In the old days things were better," is superficially true, but surely it cannot fool thinking Germans. They must see that the pleasantness of the old days was attained on the slopes of a volcano and the course of events in Germany since the war indicates that the control of the country is in the hands neither of na飗ible pacifists nor of monarchist reactionaries.

Rather the indications are that the seven years since the war began have taught Germany a permanently effective lesson which will work out into a new order which will not be the less German because it is much less imperial and warlike.

One after another the European powers bashfully make suggestions about the way the Washington conference ought to be run, but Mr. Harding and Mr. Hughes just sit still and smile benignly.

President Harding and Secretary Hughes are probably avoiding many mistakes by considering the precedents set during the last administration and then carefully doing the other thing.

Doubtless Mr. Lenin is the more reluctant to set his American prisoners free because he personally is not suffering from lack of food or the other creature comforts.

in spite of a certain sense of the beauty of youth as we rose from the moon, and the allurement of a triple moon, I remained constant to duty, and Aunt Jane, and imagined pig-off in her statement, where I passed an exciting evening listening to her means. She showed a faint returning spark of life when I mentioned Cuthbert Vane, and raised her head to murmur that he was Honorable and Asunder though not the heir still likely to inherit and perhaps after all Providence—

The unspoken end of Aunt Jane's sentence pursued me into dreams in which an unknown gentleman obligingly broke his neck riding to boulders and left Apollo heir to the title and estates.

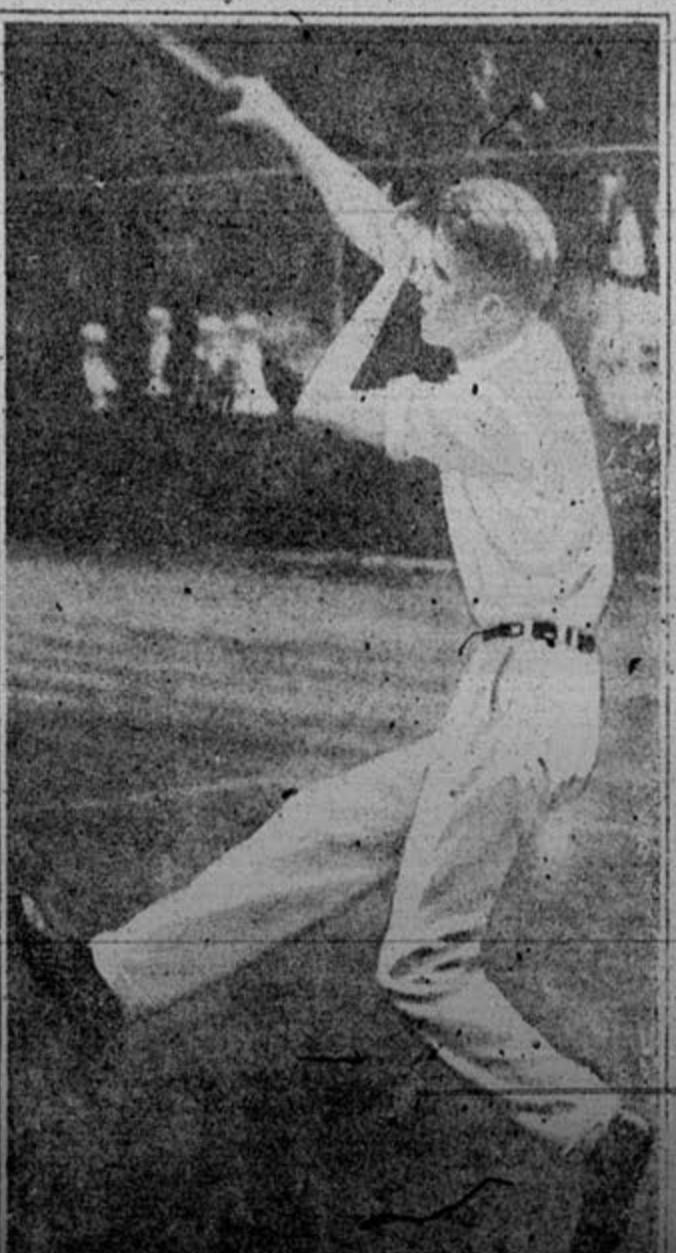

CHAPTER III.

I Engage the Enemy.

It was fortunate that I slept well in my narrow berth on board the Finland Smith, for the next day was one of trial. Aunt Jane had regretted what Mr. Tubb's wife, deprecatingly, called his hand, situated to her service, and staggered forth weakly, leaning on the arm of Miss Higley-Brown. Yes, of Miss Brown while I, Aunt Jane's own steed, trod weekly in the rear with a cushion. Already I had begun to realize how faintly I had underrated the lady of the hyphen, so imagining I had only to come and see and conquer Aunt Jane. The grim and bony one said, "Merely, Virginia," she said with quivering energy, "let me remind you that there are ties even dearer than those of blood—solidities, you know, and—and, in short, in my dear friend Miss Higley-Brown I have met for the first time in my life with a—a Sympathetic Intelligence that understands Me!"

The Boy Who Beat Tiloen

Hence Vincent Richards in action against William Tilden, world champion. Richards defeated Tilden three sets to four. One was a low set. It was Tilden's first defeat in more than a year. Richards is only 16.

So that was Violet's line! I surprised the Sympathetic Intelligence with a spelling interest.

"Really, how nice! And of course you feel quite sure that on your side you thoroughly understand—Miss Higley-Brown?"

Miss Browne's hair was rather like a clothesbrush in her mildest mood, never rising wrath. It seemed to qualify or like a lion's mane.

"Miss Harding," she said, in the censure she reserved for critical moments, "has a nature impossible to deceive, because like incapable of delusion. Miss Harding and I first met on this plane—in an atmosphere unusually favorable to soul-revelation. I knew at once that here was the appointed comrade, while in Miss Harding there was the immediate recognition of a complementary spiritual force."

"It's perfectly true, Virginia," explained Aunt Jane, beginning to cry. "You and Susan and everybody have always treated me as if I were a child and didn't know what I wanted, when the fact is I always have known perfectly well!" The last words issued in a wail from the depths of her handkerchief.

"You mean suppose," I exploded, "that what you have always wanted was to go off on this perfectly crazy chase after imaginary treasure? There now I had gone and done it. Of course it was my red hair."

"Jane," uttered Miss Higley-Brown in deep and awful tones, "Do you or do you not realize how strangely prophetic were the warnings I gave you from the first—that if you revealed our plans malignant influences would be brought to bear?" Be strong, Jane, clinging to the Dynamic Thought."

"I'm clinging!" sniffed Aunt Jane, dabbing away her tears. "Really, Virginia," she broke out in a whisper, "it is not kind to say, I suppose, that I would just as soon you hadn't come when I was learning to expand my individuality and then you come and somehow make it seem so much more difficult!"

I rose. "Very well, Aunt Jane," I said, coldly. "Expand all you like. When you get to the bursting point I'll do my best to save the pieces. For the present I suppose I had better leave you to company so much more favorable to your soul development!" And I walked away with my head in the air.

It was so much in the air, and the deck of the India Smith was so unstable, that I fell over a coil of rope and tumbled up in the arms of the Honorable Cuthbert Vane. Fortunately Friends? I echoed, aggrievedly. Friends are all very well, of course, but when you and I have lost each other, surely, it think it is natural of you to expect me to stay thousands of miles away from you all by myself? "But it was you who sent me to New York, and insisted on my staying there," she cried. Evidently she had been lying over her wrongs.

"Yes—but how different!" I interrupted harshly. "There were the consequences, of course I have to spare you sometimes to the rest of the family!" Aunt Jane is strong on family feelings, and frequently reproaches me with my lack of it.

But in expecting Aunt Jane to soft-sell at this, I reckoned without Miss Higley-Brown. A dart from the cool gray eyes galvanized my aunt into a sudden rigidity.

"My dear Virginia," she said with quivering energy, "let me remind you that there are ties even dearer than those of blood—solidities, you know, and—and, in short, in my dear friend Miss Higley-Brown I have met for the first time in my life with a—a Sympathetic Intelligence that understands Me!"

Well, it was a plausible story, and I had no doubt, so far as the Honorable Cuthbert was concerned, an absolutely truthful one. The beautiful youth was manifestly as guiltless as a small boy, a young pique with a wooden sword. But as to Mr. Shaw, who could tell that it hadn't after all been a trumped-up affair between Miss Browne and him? That his surprise at the message was not assumed to draw dust in the eyes of his young and trusting friend? So great was my faith in Aunt Jane's guiltiness, so dark my distrust of Miss Browne, that all connected with the enterprise lay under the cloud of my suspicion. Mr. Shaw, after even a casual glimpse of him, one couldn't picture as a villain, I felt that he must have gone into the enterprise with his eyes wide open to its absurdity, and fully aware that the only gold to be won by anybody must come out of the pocket of Aunt Jane.

As these reflections passed through my mind I looked up and saw the subject of their approach. He lifted his helmet, but met my eyes unsmilingly, with a sort of sober scrutiny. He had the tanned skin of a sailor, and brown hair dropped close and showing a trace of gray. This and a certain doleful grim took he had made me at first consider him quite middle-aged though I knew later that he was not yet thirty-five. As to the grimness, perhaps, I unwillingly conceded, part of it was due to a scar which seamed the right temple to the eyebrow, in a straight livid line.

He was welcomed by Mr. Vane with a joyous shrug on the shoulder-blade. "Say, old man, Miss Harding has turned out to be the most fearful double-thinker Thomas—thinks the whole scheme quite mad and all that sort of thing."

Mr. Shaw looked at me steadily. His eyes were the kind that seem to see all and reveal nothing. I felt a hot spark of defiance rising in my own.

"And indeed it is too bad," he said coolly. "The trip should not be more to Miss Harding's liking." The rough edges of his Scotch burr had been smoothed down by much wandering, but you saw it at once on which side of the Solway he had seen the light.

"It is not a question of my liking," I retorted, trying to preserve an unmoved and lofty demeanor, though my heart was beating rather quickly at finding myself actually crossing swords with the redoubtable adventurer, this man who had often faced me.

"Doubtless Mr. Lenin is the more reluctant to set his American prisoners free because he personally is not suffering from lack of food or the other creature comforts.

I had read Aunt Jane's letter telling of the perfectly absurd business she was setting out on I rushed down by the first boat. Of course I meant to take her back with me, to put a stop to all this madness; but I was too late and you are glad of it, I dare say!"

"I can't help being glad, you know," he replied, the color rising to his innocent cheeks. "It's so frightfully jolly having you along." Only I'm sorry you came against your will. Rather fancy you had it in your head that we were a band of cut-throats, eh? Well, the fact is I don't know much about the two chaps. Miss Browne picked up, though I suspect you are a very decent sort. That odd fish Captain Magnus, now—he was quite Miss Browne's own find, I assure you. And as to old H. I say, Miss Harding, you're bound to like Shaw no end when you know him—he's such a wonderfully clever chap!"

I had read Aunt Jane's letter telling of the perfectly absurd business she was setting out on I rushed down by the first boat. Of course I meant to take her back with me, to put a stop to all this madness; but I was too late and you are glad of it, I dare say!"

"I can't help being glad, you know," he replied, the color rising to his innocent cheeks. "It's so frightfully jolly having you along." Only I'm sorry you came against your will. Rather fancy you had it in your head that we were a band of cut-throats, eh? Well, the fact is I don't know much about the two chaps. Miss Browne picked up, though I suspect you are a very decent sort. That odd fish Captain Magnus, now—he was quite Miss Browne's own find, I assure you. And as to old H. H.—Tubbs, you know—

—Miss Browne keeps with him on the boat coming down. The run old chap got on her soft side somehow, and first thing she had appointed him secretary and treasurer—as though we were a crew of something. Shaw was quite a bit upset about it. What Women Talk About

THE FAD FOR WROUGHT IRON

Wrought iron, a new form of that the stages are showing. So the as it is made with the charming simplicity of design, the characteristic of the old English ironwork, a wrought iron ornament is sure to be artistic and a distinct asset to the room it adorns. Many of the new folks are adopting the making of wrought iron decorations as a hobby.

Because wrought iron is a beautiful type of decoration, because it has the element of real art, simplicity and a charm, it has undoubtedly come to stay. It carries with it an old world charm, and a fragrant suggestion of romance, and quietly conveys English alleys.

It may be safely said that there's not a room in your house which could not be improved by the introduction of one or more of these charmingly simple pieces of black wrought iron.

Who Owns the Standard Oil Company (Indiana)?

Three years ago the ownership was spread over 4623 stockholders.

Today the ownership is spread over 19,478 stockholders, of whom 7,200 are employees.

Not one of the 19,478 owns as much as 10 percent of the total stock.

The stockholders have vested the authority of management in a Board of Directors of seven men. All are skilled in their individual branch of activity and all have earned their right to a seat on the Board by displaying unusual ability.

It is the ambition of this Board to operate the Company in such a fair and square way that you, as stockholder or customer, shall have a distinct pride in the fact that there is such an institution as the Standard Oil Company (Indiana).

CAPT. COOPER MEETS WOMAN WHO FED HIM

While in Russian Prison
Miss Harrison Gave Him Much Help.

She Was Afterward Arrested
But Was Recently Released
Through Relief Association.

BERLIN, Aug. 4.—Capt. M. C. Cooper of Jacksonville, Fla., who escaped from a prison in Moscow after having been shot down in fighting between the Bolsheviks and Poles, arrived here yesterday. Margaret Harrison, the American newspaper correspondent, who was recently liberated from a Soviet prison also is in Berlin.

Capt. Cooper declared that the woman had saved his life by supplying him with bread and clothing in the Moscow prison before she herself was incarcerated.

When the two Americans met in prison, there was no affectionate greeting. "I would have gone around the Devil's hells thereafter," will go out only to his grave," said Capt. Cooper, when they are specifically directed to tell me I should never have been able to escape if it had not been for the sake of the new department of supplies you sent me. You gave me the greatest aid I have ever had to my life."

Capt. Boni, another American from New York, who was also in prison in company with the other two Americans last night with Senator France who is returning to the United States after a visit to Moscow,

MORE MOISTURE IS NEEDED BY CORN

LANSING, Aug. 4.—The crop up to this time has been the only crop forecast above normal this year, is suffering from lack of moisture in many sections of the state. Good rains are necessary if the promised bumper crop is to mature, according to the weekly Michigan crop report prepared by the federal bureau of farm crop estimates. On light soils, the report states, corn is rolling badly and failing to some extent. On strong soils it is earing well but promises a first class crop only if plentiful rains are received soon.
