THREE BLOOMS AND ONE BAUM IN AUTO CRASH

Local Boys Escape Serious Injury When Another Car Hits Them.

Were On the Way From Florence to Rhinelander Last Saturday Night; Car Little Damaged.

A. W. Carl and August Bloom and Morris Baum narrowly escaped serious injury last Saturday night about 5:30 when they were on the way to Rhinelander from Florence on route 11.

The party were riding in a Studebaker which was being driven by A. W. Bloom. That car is particularly dangerous at night and there are many sharp turns all along the way.

When Carl reached this city of the accident, E. W. Bloom, another member of the party, was traveling at a high speed and struck the rear end of the Studebaker, throwing it into the ditch and pinning the occupants under it.

Shortly after the accident the men were picked up by a passing car and taken to a hospital at Iron Mountain where they were given surgical and medical attention.

It was reported this afternoon that all of them were more or less seriously injured but not dangerously so. A. W. Bloom was badly cut on his arm and wrist and the other members of the party were bruised, and it was thought at first that they were suffering from internal injuries.

When Carl reached this city of the accident, E. W. Bloom, another member of the party, was traveling at a high speed and struck the rear end of the Studebaker, throwing it into the ditch and pinning the occupants under it.

According to reports from Iron Mountain the men were thought at first to be fatally injured, but when the effects due to shock wore off their condition was greatly improved.

"SUB-CAPITAL" AT STATE FAIR WILL SAVE SOME MONEY

It Is Urged That Building Be Erected for That Purpose; Too Many Offices Are Scattered.

LANE, Aug. 9.—In case the establishment of a "sub-capital" at the state fair grounds in Detroit is found impracticable by Governor Greenback it is very likely that the state will soon either purchase or lease a building in Detroit.

For a long time there has been a feeling among members of the state administrative board that the metropolitan branch offices of the state departments should be grouped in one building. At the present time of them are housed in the rented space occupied by the secretary of state's Wayne branch, and Cass avenue. Offices are sprinkled throughout the city in other buildings.

This proposition of grouping of offices is claimed to be expensive to the state and it is believed that the metropolitan branch offices of the state departments should be grouped in one building. At the present time of them are housed in the rented space occupied by the secretary of state's Wayne branch, and Cass avenue. Offices are sprinkled throughout the city in other buildings.

The Tire Sensation of 1921

A Cord Puncture-proof Pneumatic Automobile Tire has been Perfected

THIS will be good news to motorists who base their tire purchases upon satisfactory service.

It is well-known that the Lee Tire & Rubber Company, makers of the only successful puncture-proof pneumatic tire, have been working to incorporate their steel disc system of protection into the cord tire.

During two years of scientific factory and road tests, this sensational new tire has proven out in an amazing manner.

In addition to being the equal of any other tire on the market in its cord construction, the Lee Puncture-proof Cord has the added feature of immunity from puncture.

So thoroughly has the Lee Cord Puncture-proof proven its ability to stand up under the most unfavorable tests that the company makes a sweeping cash refund guarantee against puncture.

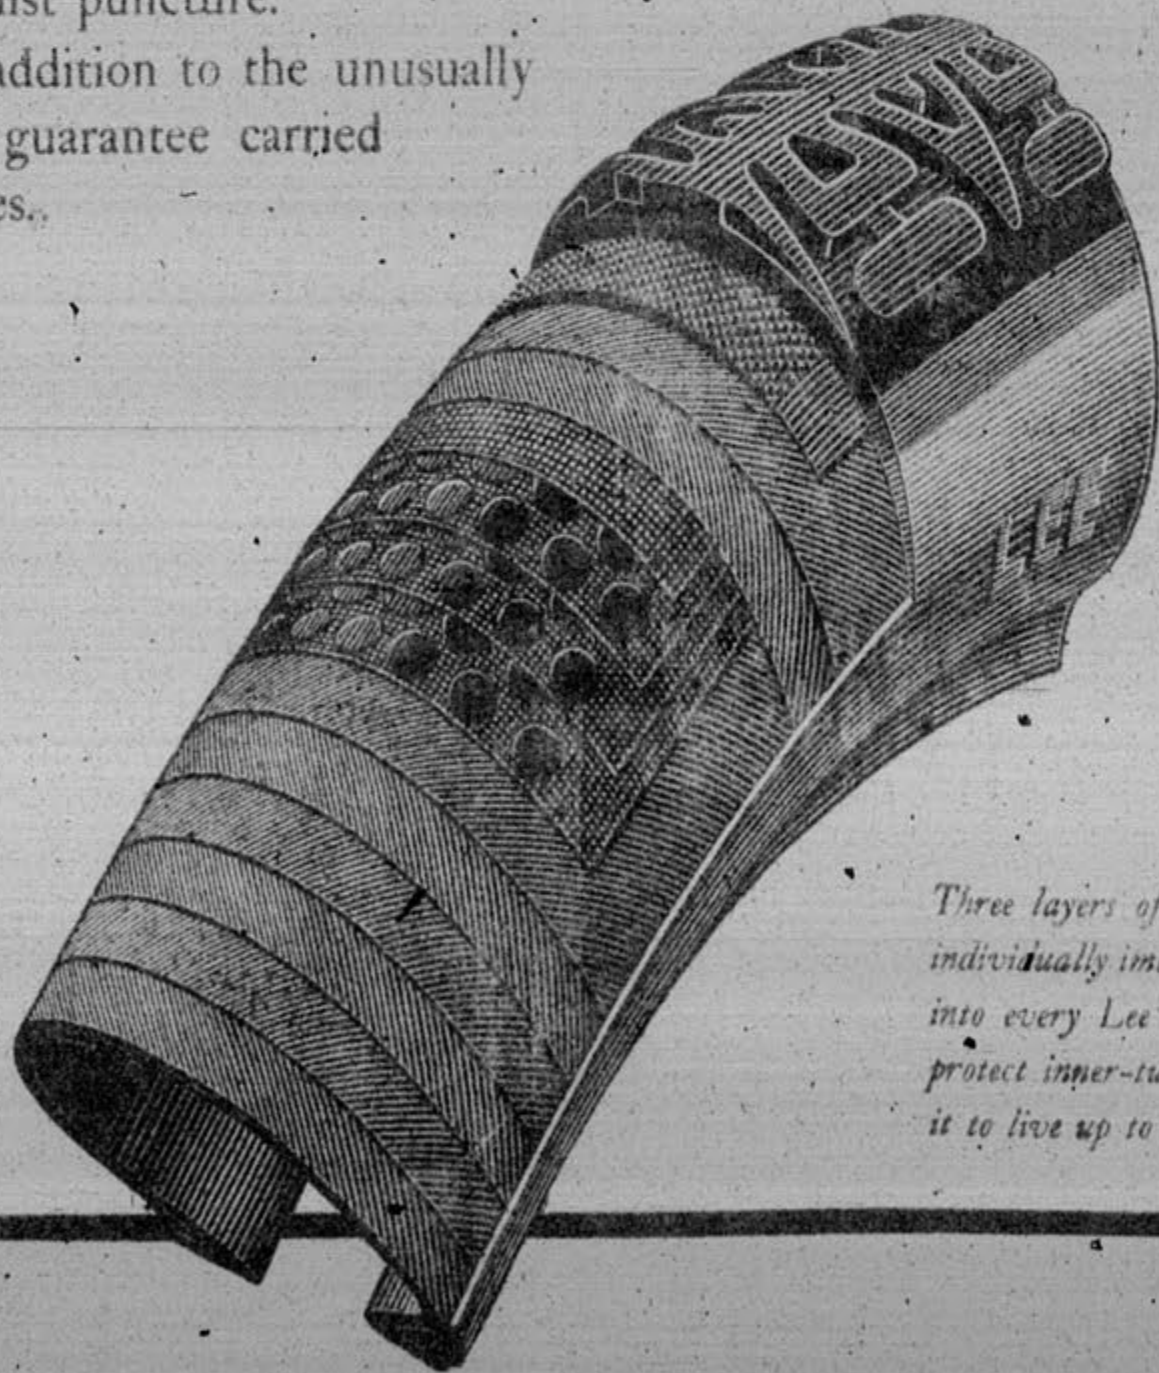

This is in addition to the unusually liberal mileage guarantee carried by all Lee Tires.

Lee Cord Puncture-proofs on loaded cars have been run repeatedly over spiked boards, roads strewn with tacks, nails and broken glass.

In every instance Lee Cord Puncture-proof tires have triumphed—shown themselves worthy of their name and reputation.

Tire experts hail the Lee Cord Puncture-proof as the climax of tire manufacture—at last the perfect tire—which in material-quality and performance—whether on light or heavy passenger car, or business car, delivery car, light or heavy truck—makes good.

No matter what your service, the Lee Line of Pneumatic offers a tire for every purpose. Lee Fabric Tires, Lee Cords, Lee Puncture-proof Fabrics and—greatest of all—Lee Cord Puncture-proofs—the tire sensation of 1921.

Three layers of case-hardened steel discs, individually imbedded in pure rubber, built into every Lee Puncture-proof Cord tire protect inner-tube and carcass, and enable it to live up to its name.

IT MAY be presumptuous to compare any story with the immortal "Treasure Island," but there is a real basis for it here, for the narrative does deal with treasure, pirates and a Pacific island in an uncommonly delightful way.

In thrills, it must yield to its great predecessor; in humor, it is at least a good second; in variety and up-to-dateness, it has the advantage.

It is a real treasure hunt with the unique quality, giving rise to delicious humor, that the hunters are led by women. It is a genuine treat.

PRINTERS ARE BATTLING FOR 44 HOUR WEEK

J. W. Hays Addresses National Convention at Opening Today

Secretary-Treasurer Declares the Fight Will Be Won by the Printers in Short Time

(By Associated Press) QUERETARO, Aug. 8.—The fight of the International Typographical Union for the forty-four hour week has become a battle against the J. W. Hays of Indianapolis in his annual appeal to the convention opening here.

The secretary, J. W. Hays, said in the first of the most stirring and what promises to be a considerable address at the opening of the printers' office conditions to which it is being entitled, by reason of an agreement which it made with employing printers, more than two years ago.

One of the speakers that had the question of the forty-four hour week brought up to the printer, die, engraver and other officers of printing trade unions there would have been little to say, difficulty in putting it into effect on May 1, 1921. However, the union's position in other industries has been strengthened by the fact that the printer's union has been able to make similar demands, and would require a concession, had it not been for the printer's union.

It was impossible for the speaker to say that these printers' employees start of a publicity campaign against the idea of shortening hours of labor in all industries and established a local union of work under forty-four hour week conditions. It was this day of labor that the printer's union is fighting a campaign in opposition to the carrying out of the agreement.

Mr. Hays declared that the printer's union is fighting the fight with the International Typographical Union.

The fight for the 44-hour week will led to the condition, it might also because of the "conservative position" it took during the world war period when members of the typographical accepted smaller increases and did more to keep industry moving than did the members and representatives of any other organization in the country.

It is expected the 1920 census will show a national average of at least 20 per cent. A NATIONAL DEFENSE DEPARTMENT

At a moment when discussion in the senate had wandered away from the matter in hand Senator Smoot lifted a corner of the veil which conceals the proceedings of the committee appointed to consider reorganization of the executive departments. It had been stated in a newspaper that the committee would recommend the creation of a department of public welfare and the consolidation of the war and navy departments into a department of national defense.

This Senator Smoot denied, but he revealed the fact that Walter Brown, who represents the President on the committee and is doing most of the hard work, favors that plan. He also stated that the committee would consider the idea and clearly implied in his remarks a possibility that it would be reported favorably to congress.

Although consolidation of the war and navy departments has been suggested frequently the country is hardly prepared to express an opinion on the subject and will not be until a clear statement of what is proposed becomes available. The two departments are sufficiently distinct as to warrant the opinion that if any proposed reorganization they will remain, for the most part, separate. Instead of being members of the cabinet, however, the immediate heads of the army and navy will presumably, be at the heads of primary subdivisions of the department with perhaps a third or fourth division in charge of aeronautics. In this connection it is interesting to recall the fact that a consolidated war and navy department is not absolutely novel in the United States. Under the original organization of the cabinet there was no navy department and the secretary of war looked after army and navy alike, though there was nothing much that could be called a navy.

The principal consideration in favor of some such arrangement, is the fact that it would—or at least should—result in greater cooperation with a corresponding decrease of duplicated work. Very likely another consideration which moves Mr. Brown is a wish to make room in the cabinet for a secretary of public welfare without increasing the number of cabinet officers. That is a project dear to the President's heart and may incline him strongly toward a department of national defense.

AN EARLY CONFERENCE

Announced from Washington that the uppermost problem in connection with the disarmament conference relates to the date. This country favors an early meeting and suggests Armistice day, November 11, as appropriate. Some of the other countries, notably Great Britain and Japan, appear to prefer an extended delay. The British colonies desire more time than Washington is inclined to favor in order that they may get together and decide upon common policies, and it has been suggested that Japan is for delay because it wishes to fix certain matters beyond the possibility of change before going into the conference.

One evident reason for getting an early start is that the sooner the conference begins the sooner the nations may expect to reap the benefits in reduced expenditures.

Another reason for an early meeting is suggested by what it said of Japan. The war left international relations in a more or less fluid state and that unsettlement continues, thought it is being constantly modified in the direction of stability by international agreement and through the establishment of national policies. What is needed is to get the nations together before their minds are irrevocably made up.

This, apparently, is the Washington view, and it may be hoped that Secretary Hughes will prevail over the objections coming from other nations and bring the conference together in Washington before snow flies.

SENTIMENT PUT ABOVE SENSE

The governor of Indiana is reported to have issued a pardon to a woman confined for forgery because he does not wish her baby to be stigmatized by birth in prison. The idea behind the pardon appeals strongly to venge sentiment but scarcely to reason.

It is no disgrace to be born in prison or—be it reverently said—in a stable. This follows as a part of the larger truth that the circumstances attending the birth of any person cannot be fairly considered in the estimate placed upon that person. Nobody is responsible for his parents and nobody comes into this world of his own free will.

However, it cannot be denied that babies born of criminal parents suffer certain disadvantages wherever the facts of their ancestry are known, but it is the reputation of the parents and not the fact they were caught and imprisoned which affects the prospects of their offspring adversely.

In the Indiana case the sensible procedure to follow on behalf of the baby would have been to send the mother quietly to the hospital and say nothing about it but instead a sentimental governor issues a public pardon, gives the facts and the names to the newspapers and seems to think he served the baby well instead of badly.

The New York Times says some men are born to leadership, others acquire it and still others have it thrust upon them. In the last class it ranks President Harding but it says nothing about the time when George Harvey did a little thrusting.

That Philadelphia did not know it had been bombed and laid in ruins is accounted for by the fact that the army fliers used imaginary bombs but would real bombs wake Philadelphia to a knowledge of what was going on?

One paper making machine in Canada eats up all the timber on 14 acres of land every day. Did the man who said "of the making of books there is no end" anticipate anything like that?

The Cave With Two Mouths.

Obscure as were the directions which Hopperdown's once had taken from his dining table, one point at least was clear—the treasure-trove, opened on the sea. This second and immense simplification of the problem, until now discovered that the great wall of cliffs was honeycombed with fissures. One of the peaks which had been left with us, and in it Mr. Shaw, with the Honorable Quibben and Captain Magnus, made a preliminary voyage of discovery. This yielded the information above set down, plus, however, the startling and significant fact that a cave was predicted to be the hiding place of treasure, and moreover a cave with the specified two openings ran under the point which protected the anchorage on the south. Only the Scotchman remained exceptionally calm and decided to admit that the treasure was as good as found.

"It all did lose the color of my money before I reckon the interest on it," he remarked. "It's true the cave would be a likely and convenient place for hiding the chest; the question is: Wouldn't it be too likely and convenient? Simpson would surely choose the spot of all others where the first corner who had got word of the story would be certain to look."

As Japs Worship Deceased

Here is an unusual picture of daily worship at a Japanese family shrine. There are daily offerings of food for the deceased members of the family.

ing in other darkness, particularly I, whom fate had placed opposite Captain Magnus. Since landing on the island, Captain Magnus had sworn the efficacy of forks. Ledged to the hill, his knife would approach his cavernous mouth and disappear in it. Yet when it emerged Captain Magnus was alive. Where did it go? This was a question that agitated me daily.

The story of Captain Magnus was obscure. It was certain that he had his captain's papers, though how he had mastered the science of navigation sufficiently to obtain them was a problem. Though he held a British navigator's license, he did not appear to be an Englishman.

The captain, as Mr. Vane had remarked, was Miss Browne's own find. Before the objections of Mr. Shaw—evidently a Negative Influence from the beginning—had caused her to abandon the scheme, Miss Browne had planned to charter a vessel in New York and sail around the Horn to the island. While cursing this project she had formed an extensive acquaintance with persons frequenting the New York waterfront, among whom was Captain Magnus. As I heard her remark, he was the one nautical character whom she found sympathetic by which I judge that the others were skeptical and rude.

Being sympathetic, Captain Magnus found it an easy matter to attach himself to the expedition—or perhaps it was Violet who snared him. I don't know which.

It was fortunate that Cookie knew nothing of the solitary grave somewhere on the island, with its stone marked with H. B. and a cross-bones, nor that the inhabitant thereof was supposed to walk. If he had, I think the strange specter of a lone negro in a small boat rowing lustily for the American continent might soon have been witnessed on the Pacific by any eyes that were there to see. And he could not have spared either a part of cook.

Yet even though unmoved by this grossness of knowledge, after two or three days I noticed that Cookie was ill at ease. As the leisure member of the party, I enjoyed more of Cookie's society than the rest. On this occasion while the morning was still in its freshness he was permitting me to make fudge. But his usual fortality was gone. I saw that he glanced over his shoulder at intervals, muttering dully to himself. Also that a rabbit's foot was stung conspicuously about his neck.

Having made my fudge and set the pan on a stone in the stream to cool, I was about to retire with a view to conducting a limited exploring expedition of my own. The assurances of Mr. Shaw—not personally directed to me, of course; the armed trust under which we lived did not permit of that—had convinced me that I had not to dread anything more ferocious than the pigs, and the wildest of those would retire before a stick or a stone. Besides, I boasted a little automatic, which I carried strapped to my waist in a businesslike manner. Mr. Vane had almost got me to the point where I could shoot it off without hurting my eyes.

Thus equipped, I was about to set off into the woods. I had turned my back on Cookie and the camp, when I was arrested by an exclamation: "Miss Jiny!"

I turned to find Cookie gazing after me with an expression which, in the familiar phrase of fiction, I could not interpret, though among its harlequin tones were doubt and anguish. Cookie, too, looked pale. I don't in the least know how he managed it, but that was the impression he conveyed, dully as he was.

"Miss Jiny, it mos' look lak yo' 'bout to go perambulating in dese yere woods!"

"I am, Cookie," I admitted. The whites of Cookie's eyes became alarmingly suspicious. Drawing near in a stolid manner he whispered: "Ye' bettah not, Miss Jiny!"

"Oh, nonsense, Cookie!" I said impatiently. "There's not a thing on the island but the pigs!"

"Miss Jiny," he solemnly replied, "dey's pigs and pigs."

"Yes, but pigs is pigs, you know," I remarked, laughing. "Dey's pigs and pigs, eh?—Live ones and dead ones."

"Dead ones?" Of course—haven't we been eating them?"

Jack's a Sky Pilot Now

Jack Dempsey is living a high life now. Bought a speed airplane. Here he is ready for a practice flight with Henry Rogers, who recently won the international air tournament at Los Angeles.

Ye' Bettah Not, Miss Jiny!

All we knew, by looking in the night shadows, even through the day light hours. Also, though he did not know this motive, I believe he found my company very annoying. It is immensely easier to find a ghost in the sustaining presence of stars, bushes and blood.

For a moment I hovered in my own vermination. What if the island had its wild creatures after all? But neither fox nor panther nor any other beast of prey is white, except a polar bear, and it would be unusual to meet one on a tropical island.

I decided that Cookie's pig was after all a pig, though still in the house. I thought I remembered having seen quite full pigs, which would have to be white with a fringed margin in the dim light of dawn. I regarded Cookie as best I could by pretending to count my fingers if I heard, or saw anything suspicious, and struck out into the woods.

For all my brave words to Cookie, I had no intention of going very far afield. From the shore of the cave I had observed that the ground behind the clearing rose to the summit of a low ridge, perhaps four hundred feet in height, which jutted from the base of the peak. From this ridge I thought I might see something more of the island than the limited environment of Lantern bay.

As the woods shut out the last glimpse of the white tents in the clearing, as even the familiar sound of the surf died down to a faint, half-languid whisper mingling with the rustling of the palms overhead, I experienced a certain discomfort, which persons given to hard and unqualified terms, might have called "fear." It seemed to me as if a very strong cord at the rear of my belt were jerking me back toward the notorious safety of the camp. I fingered my automatic and touched on up the hill, trying not to gasp when a leaf rustled in a coconut dropped in the woods.

I gained the summit of the ridge, and stood upon a bare rock platform, faintly sheltered by a few trees, large shrubs, rather, with a smooth, gray leaf of vivid green. On the left rose the great mass of the peak. From far above, above its crest, a beautiful, sunny waterfall came hurrying down.

I had not dreamed of getting a view so glorious from the little eminence of the place. There was an tinge of awe to take back to camp. Having with great urgency threatened the phantoms, I turned to go. And as I turned I saw a shape vanish into the woods.

It was an animal, not a human shape, and it was white. It had in its eyes every distinguishing mark of Cookie's phantom pig. Only it was not a pig. At least, shadowy glimpses of it had told me that. I knew what it was not for what it was I could not say. I stood there, rooted, even as now.

Would it attack me, or should I only be of fright? I wondered if my heart were weak, and if it was, so that I should be too feeble to bear the brunt of the unknown thing that in my flesh I thought of as a receiver and after an instant of the most unsteady glow it came from the cave. My fingers trembled at once nervously limp and suddenly rigid. This was not at all the dainty, less frigid with which I had dreamed of meeting mine. I had fancied myself with my automatic making a rather posy picture as a young Amazon—but I had been a dreadful fear that my receiver might spontaneously go off and wound the thing, and after even if it had penetrated letting me go, it would certainly attack me. Never would I look to my receiver, as to my last hope.

I began to take away step-wise to the woods. Little by little, I said to myself over and over, unconsciously, "Don't run, don't run."

It is the beginning of the end.

EMPLOYEES KEEP PLANT RUNNING BY LOWER WAGE

Merchants Co-operate by Lowering Nearly All Their Prices.

Forty Per Cent Cut Is Sliced From Pay Roll of the Big Eastern Maganese Plant at Dunbar.

UNDERTOWN, Pa., Aug. 9.—Nearly 1,000 employees of the American Maganese Co. at Dunbar, Fayette county, have accepted a forty per cent reduction in wages to keep the plant in operation. It was announced recently by management of the workmen. Company officials and merchants of Dunbar also did their part to keep the plant running.

This attitude of mutual understanding to keep the plant is attributed to the efforts of perfect understanding brought about by R. M. Marshall, general manager of the company, and a former University of Pennsylvania basketball star.

The company cut costs of its houses 5 to 10 per cent while merchant merchants agreed to a sharp reduction of prices.

New York Has a Garage Devoted to Push Carts

NEW YORK, Aug. 9.—There is a garage in New York devoted to the pushing of push carts. It is a garage for the use of the city's many push carts. The garage is a place where the carts are kept when not in use. It is a place where the carts are kept in good condition and ready for use.

But the use of the street has largely lost its potency for the city and boys who once dashed past in the streets of New York. Now most of the carts are kept at night in the garage. The garage is a place where the carts are kept in good condition and ready for use.

War Vets Vanish In Peace Times Same As in War

(By Associated Press)

DETROIT, Aug. 9.—Peace has its own peculiarities. One of them is the disappearance of the war veterans. In the last year he has been called upon to lend assistance in finding more than five veterans of European wars. In practically every instance, he has been unable to find them. The reason for this is that the veterans have disappeared. They have vanished in peace times just as they did in war.

In addition to the exodus which causes men to disappear in civil life there are others more closely associated with war. Still another one is the disappearance of the veterans. They have vanished in peace times just as they did in war.

MICHIGAN INDIANS ARE DROPPING FAST

State Had 7,519 in 1910 and 5,613 in 1920; Death Rate Same at White Man's.

(By Associated Press)
LANSING, Mich., Aug. 9.—How many Indians look like "Ch. 19"? Data of succeeding generations will be called upon to answer the question more and more frequently, concludes Dr. William J. Deason, director of the division of vital statistics of the state department of health, after reviewing birth and death records of Michigan Indians.

In 1910 the U. S. census counted the state with 7,519 Indians. In 1920 the Indian population had dropped to 5,613, though the decrease is attributed in some measure to a more exact enumeration of Indians who have crossed with other races.

On the basis that 5,613 Indians were living in Michigan in 1919, their general death rate for the year was 31.1 per 1,000 population, death claiming 176. Only 56 babies were reported born in 1919. This number corresponds to a birth rate of 8.2 per 1,000 population, or about one-third that of the white race. Births of 92 Indian babies were recorded within the next 12 months, raising the birth rate to 16.4, or about equal to the white man's death rate in many places.

With 92 deaths reported during the first six months of 1921, the general death rate of the Indians now equals 21.6 per 1,000.

NOISE DOES NOT FRIGHTEN FISH SAYS PROFESSOR

Declares They Are Not Able to Hear, Even the Noise of Motor Boat Falls to Reach Them.

ANN ARBOR, Aug. 9.—Fishermen of Michigan have found a champion. No longer will trout be able to explain that the noise made by its wife frightened the fishy tribe. It is no longer an absurdity than the fisherman makes his reputation on the contention that fish are not susceptible to their noises.

Even the exhaust of a motorboat will not affect the fish for they cannot hear, Prof. Bernhard declares. Tapping or pounding on the boat might develop sound waves that the fish could hear, the professor told his classes in a recent lecture, but the greater density of water practically excludes the possibility of surface sounds or air waves being conveyed to inhabitants of the deep.

Fish have the sense of smell for more highly developed than the sense of hearing. Prof. Bernhard maintains, and he recommends that fish take full advantage of this condition. Even in the dark fish will be attracted to the proper kind of bait by the sense of smell it is declared.

County Agents Going to Be Checked Now

LANSING, Aug. 9.—As the first step toward checking up on the expenditures of county agents the state administrative board, on the recommendation of Auditor General Fuller, has ordered that hereafter all claims from county agents shall be investigated by State Murray, administrator of public welfare. In cases where there is no doubt as to the correctness of the claim it will be immediately approved. In cases where the basis for the claim is not altogether clear, thorough investigation will be made before payment is presented to the state register or auditor for payment.

Mr. and Mrs. Anoch Peterson and children who have been visiting at the home of their parents, will leave for Whitefish where they will attend the wedding of Mrs. Peterson's sister who is to be married Wednesday.
