

PROTECTION IN CASE OF RAIN IS INCREASING

Cost $75,000 to Protect Dempsey-Carpenter Bout in July.

Many Different Lines of Business Now Insure Against Rain; Premium High.

(By Associated Press)
NEW YORK, Aug. 10.—The British custom of taking out weather insurance has acquired a strong foothold in the United States.

Five major league baseball clubs this season have taken out weather insurance on all of their Saturday, Sunday and holiday playing dates. Many minor league managers are similarly insuring their schedules.

More than $1,500,000 was insured in the United States for the last month of July, it is estimated. The weather was generally good, but the season was still policy holders. Labor Day is expected to break the July Fourth record.

A British company underwrote a $100,000 rain insurance policy for Tex. Electric in protection against financial setbacks which the element might have caused on July 2, the day of the Dempsey-Carpenter bout. The premium of this policy was reported to have been $72,000.

California also has begun to insure against rain. Saturday during the last full season and state and county fairs are likewise taking out the insurance. Some writers report that horse racing promoters and owners of boat trips for holiday excursions are their

GROESBECK TO GOVERN FUTURE PRIZE FIGHTS

Chief Executive of State Will Say Who Is Going to Fight.

New Boxing Commission Will Apparently Act in Advisory Capacity; Fans Are Worried.

LANSING, Aug. 10.—Governor Groesbeck has indicated that hereafter he will personally approve or disapprove applications for permission to hold boxing bouts in Michigan. He will also investigate all applications for authority to operate newly organized athletic organizations that intend to put on boxing shows.

Just what this latest move of the executive means is a question. He has not flatly defined what kind of bouts may or may not be held in the state. Members of the state boxing commission believe that a fight with Harry Leonard as one of the principals will be permitted on Labor Day. Others are interested in the game contend that a championship fight and that 100,000 on the shows in the state will be more in the nature of benefit pulls, usually conducted by comparative unknowns than anything else.

The boxing commission under the new order of things and his separate orders are apparently to act in a merely advisory capacity. It is very doubtful whether or not they will ever again enjoy the unlimited power they formerly possessed. It is pointed out by those hostile to the regulation of championship bouts that the law now on file to prevent them. On the other side of the argument there is the undisputed fact that the governor has the power of appointment so far as the boxing commission is concerned. If one commissioner attempts to override the gubernatorial wishes it is within his power to replace him with a new commissioner who will view the fighting game as the governor sees it.

GRAY HAIR BECOMES DARK AND BEAUTIFUL

Try Grandmother's Old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur.

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is messy and troublesome. Nowadays we simply ask at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound." You will get a large bottle of this old-time recipe improved by the addition of other ingredients at very little cost. Everybody knows this preparation now, because no one can possibly tell that you have turned your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw it through your hair, taking one fall at a time, by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, thick and glossy and you look years younger. Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet preparation. It is not intended for the cure of dandruff or prevention of itching.

A STORY OF UPS AND DOWNS

It is really impossible longer to neglect the recent announcement that ears are coming back. They have been out of sight for a long time, but no student of history could have doubted that they would reappear, for they always do.

Perhaps an attentive study of the past would enable historians to predict the appearances and disappearances of ears, as the astronomers do the apparitions of the heavenly bodies, but one does not need to go into ancient history for proof that there is a periodic tendency on the part of women's hair to descend and veil their ears.

Perhaps the monotony is accounted for by the fact that, notwithstanding the aid of wigs, puffs and rats, hair does not lend itself well to a variety of treatments. Its length is confined to rather narrow limits and it is fastened on. It can, of course, be made to take on fantastic shapes by the use of adhesives and concealed frames, but even the greatest slave of fashion rebels a little when styles of hair dressing become so elaborate that a lady must have her hair "done" once and wear it that way night and day.

In periods of the greatest extravagance in hair fashions that has been done, but such styles do not last. Instead the demand for change results in putting the hair up over the ears if it is down or putting it down when it is up. In the existing circumstances, there is nothing to do but put it up and another era of ears is at hand.

A MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE

Changes in public taste for amusement have been many and are often unaccountable. Light opera has all but disappeared and the minstrel show, which was a national institution and had a strong foothold in London, scarcely figures on the theatre bills, as the New York Herald notes in connection with a few remarks on the decline of the prestidigitator.

One explanation that might be offered is that the magicians failed to learn new tricks. The charge is true for stage magic was always very much the same thing, no matter who worked the wonders, but if that cause is sufficient it ought to have killed magic at a time when, as a matter of fact, it was immensely popular. The same old tricks outlasted generation after generation. By the time one man tired of the show his children were ready and eager to be fooled by the illusions that had been a marvel to father.

Was the real charm of the sleight-of-hand show not in the tricks themselves but in the succession of clever men who did them? Was it Herdman's grace and Keller's mystic gravity rather than the wonders they performed that made their shows so popular? That may be it and if so magic is only waiting for an artist who can bring it back. But if it is really true that the tricks themselves no longer please a sophisticated world then the black art needs an inventor like Houdin who can devise new wonders.

THAT WOODEN FLEET

When Chairman Lusk, of the shipping board, said the other day, as others have said before him, that the best thing to do with the wooden ships now owned by the government would be to sink them, it may have been taken as an emphatic expression of disgust rather than as a deliberate opinion. Certainly he did not intend to say that the engines and removable fittings should be sent to the bottom of the sea, but he may seriously intend to say that there is not much else to do with the hulls.

Shipbuilding has been going on at a tremendous rate since the war. The war losses have been made up and good authorities have expressed the opinion that the world is over supplied with tonnage. There is certainly an over supply for the present demand. Wooden ships cannot compete with steel ships. Their operating costs are higher and they carry less. The ships that were built for the government were built in haste and their reputation is not good, but the cost of keeping them in idleness is said to run up to about $50,000 a month. With that fixed charge to meet and an uncertainty whether wooden ships can be disposed of in the market, a proposition to sink them is not so wildly unreasonable as it seems at first blush, and it may actually become a necessary policy, at least as to some of the worst of the wooden fleet.

Now that the Sheppard-Towner bill for the improvement of motherhood has passed, a man in Washington rises to demand a bill for the improvement of fathers. The mothers will doubtless approve if congress can do something to improve father's earning capacity.

New York is now making tremendous efforts to beat Tammany with a fusion ticket, but if history repeats itself New York will be up in arms a few years hence trying to beat the high brow fusionist with a good old-fashioned Tammany man.

A proposition in St. Louis to permit women to hold office under the city charter was defeated by a majority of 841, largely because the women failed to turn out and vote, and yet St. Louis gets indignant when people say it is slow.

The Strange Deeds of the Jungle Was a White Bull-Terrier.

The thing was in fact a bull terrier to keep and restore him to the help of service of his gods. With another of my dogs, I started on my way. He shook, trembled, heeled, then was after me with a bound. So I brought him triumphantly across the tundra, at the little stream, and marched him into camp under the awning eyes of Cookie.

to my courage in sailing forth in pursuit of the phantom. Even those holding other views of the genesis of the white dog were amazed at his presence on the island. In spite of Cookie's assertions, the creature was no more than a thoroughbred of points. Not by any means a dog which some little South American counter might have abandoned here when it put in for water. The most reasonable hypothesis seemed to be that he had, in some way, been left behind on his master's departure. But who that had loved a dog enough to make it the companion of his solitude would go away and leave it? The thing seemed to me incredible. Yet here, otherwise unaccounted for, was the corporeal presence of the dog.

I had named the terrier in the first ten minutes of our acquaintance. Cruso was the designation by which he was presented to his new associates. Violet tolerated him, Aunt Jane called him a dear twenty petrous love, Captain Magnus kicked him when he thought I was looking, Outbert Vane chummed with him in frank comradeship, and Mr. Shaw softened toward him to an extent which made me only wince. "Love me, love my dog" - only reversed. Not that I in the least wanted to be loved, only you feel it an impertinence in a person who so palpably does not love you to endeavor to engage the affections of your bull-terrier.

As to Cookie, he magnanimously consented to overlook Cruso's dubious past as a ghost-pig, and fed him as liberally as the terrier's lean and graceful form threatened to assume the contours of a leering pig.

CHAPTER VII

An Excursion and an Alarm. As the only person who had discovered anything on the island, I was now invested with a certain importance. Also, I had a playfellow and companion for future walks, in lieu of Outbert Vane, held down tight to the thankless toll of treasure-hunting by his stern taskmaster. But at the same time I was provided with an annoying, because unanswerable question which had lodged at the back of my mind like a crumb in the throat.

By what strange chance had the copriatherer come away and left Cruso on the island?

One morning, instead of starting directly after breakfast for the cave, Mr. Shaw basted himself in front of the supply tent with certain explosives which were to be used in the digging operations later. Having inquired of the Honorable Outbert and found that for an hour or two the boat would not be to requisition, I permitted the beautiful south to understand that I would not decline an invitation to be robed about the cave. Mr. Shaw had left his marine glasses lying about, and I had been doing some exploring with them. Under the great eaves on the fourth shore of the bay I had seen an object that excited my curiosity. It seemed to be the hull of a small vessel, lying on the narrow strip of rocks and sand under the cliff. Now, wreckage anywhere fits me with sad and romantic thoughts, but on the shores of a desolate island even a barrel-hoop seems to suffer a sea-change into something fish and strange. I therefore commended the b. s. to row, me over to the spot where the derelict lay.

I lay back idly in the stern as the boat skinned over the smooth water beneath the strokes of my splendid oarsman. More than ever he looked like the island god. Every day he grew more brown and braver, more sly in his physical vigor. The cliffs on the north shore of the cove were considerably higher than on the other side. The wreck lay close in, driven high upon the narrow shelf of rocks and sand at the base of the sheer ascent. Sand had heaped up around her hull and hung itself across her deck like a white whirling-sheet. Surprisingly, the vessel was a very small one, a little sloop, indeed, much like the fragile pleasure-boats that cluster under the Sausalito shore at home. The single mast had been broken off short, and the stump of the bowsprit was visible, like a finger beckoning for rescue from the crawling sand.

"Poor forlorn little boat!" I said. "What in the world do you suppose brought such a mite of a thing to this unheard-of spot?" "Perhaps she belonged to the copri chap. One man could handle her." "What would he want with her? A small boat like this is better for fishing and rowing about the cove." "Perhaps she brought him here from 'anona, though he couldn't have counted on taking back a very bulky cargo."

Then why leave her strewn about on the rocks? And besides - here the puzzle of Cruso recurred to me and seemed to link itself with this - "They have fled to get away himself?" We roved in close under the port bow of the sloop, and on the rail I made out a string of faded letters. I beamed excitedly to spoil them out. "I - oh, Island Queen! You see she did belong here. Probably she brought the original porcine Adam and Eve to the island." "Luckily forgot the snake, though" remarked the Honorable Berthe with unlooked-for vivacity. "So far Aunt Jane's trembling anticipations had been unfulfilled by the sight of a single snake, a fact laid by me to the credit of St. Patrick and by Cookie to that of the pigs." "Snakes I see by systems on de half shell to dem pigs," declared Cookie. As we rowed away from the melancholy little derelict I saw that near-by a narrow gutter gave access to the top of the cliff, and I resolved that I would avail myself of this path to visit the Island Queen again. My mind continued to dwell upon the unknown figure of the copri-gatherer. Perhaps the loss of his sloop had condemned him to weary months or years of solitude upon the island, before the rare glimmer of a sail, or the trail of a steamer's smoke upon the horizon gladdened his longing eyes.

Suddenly I turned to Outbert Vane. "How do you know, really, that he ever did leave the island?" I demanded. "Who - the copri chap? Well, why else was the cabin cleared out so carefully - no clothes left about or anything?" "That's true," I acknowledged. The last occupants of the boat had evidently made a very deliberate and orderly business of packing up their things.

We drifted about the cove for a while, then steered into the shimmering shadow of the measure-cavern. Mr. Vane indicated the point at which they had arrived in their exploitation among the fissures opening from the ledge.

The place held me with its fascination, but we dared not linger long, for as the tide turned one man would have much ado to manage the boat. So we slid through the archway into the bright sunshine of the cove, and headed for the camp.

As we neared the beach we saw a figure peering it. It was Dagald Shaw. And quite unexpectedly my heart began to beat with startle and quickness. Dagald Shaw, who didn't like my and who never looked at me - except just sometimes, when he was perfectly sure I didn't know it - there he was, waiting for us, and splashing into the foam to help Outbert bench the boat - he for whom a thousand years ago the skulls would have made a sign.

The b. y. hailed him cheerfully as we sprang out upon the sand. But the Scotchman was unamiable. "Make haste after your tools, lad," he ordered. "We'll have fine work to get inside the cave before the turn."

Those were his words; his tone and his grim look meant, "So in spite of all my care you are being beguiled by a mix."

It was his tone that I answered. "Oh, don't scold Mr. Vane," I pleaded. "Every paradise has its serpent, and as there are no others here I suppose I am it. Of course all birds serpents who know their business have red hair. Don't blame Mr. Vane for what was naturally all my fault."

Not a line of his face changed. Indeed, before my next vicious stroke it never did change.

"To be sure it seems unreasonable to blame the lad," he agreed soberly. "But then he happens to be under my authority."

"Mending, I suppose, that you would much prefer to blame me," I choked. "There's logic, no doubt, in striking at the root of the trouble," he admitted with an air of calm detachment.

"Then strike," I said furiously. "Strike, why don't you, and beat about the bush so? Because then he would be quite hopelessly in the wrong, and I could adopt any of several roles - the oddity, the wounded but forgiving, etc. with great enjoyment."

But without a change in his placid manner he quite casually remarked: "It would seem - I had struck - home."

I walked away. Fortunately nobody undertook to exercise my guardianship over Cruso, and the little white dog bore me faithful company in my rambles. Mostly these were confined to the neighborhood of the cave. I never ventured beyond Lookout ridge, but there I went often with Cruso, and we would sit upon a rock and talk to each other about our first encounter there, and the fight he had given me. Every body else had gone, gazed and admired. But the only constant pilgrim besides myself, was of all people, Captain Magnus. The captain's unexpected arrival for scenery carried him thither whenever he had half an hour to spare from the work in the cave. Needless to say, Cruso and I timed our visits so as not to conflict with his.

One day, as Cruso and I came down from the ridge, we met Captain Magnus ascending. I had in my hand a small metal-backed mirror, which I had found, surprisingly, lying in a mossy niche between the rocks. It was a thing such as a man might carry in his pocket, though on the island it seemed unlikely that anyone would do so. I at once attributed the mirror to Captain Magnus, for I knew that no one else had been on the ridge for days. I was wondering as I walked along whether by some subtle law of compensation the captain really thought himself beautiful, and sought this retired spot to admire not the view but his own physiognomy.

When the captain saw me he stopped in the path. There was a growth of fern on either side. I approached slowly, and as he did not move, paused, and held out the mirror. "I think you must have dropped this, Captain Magnus. I found it on the rocks."

For an instant his face changed. His evasive eyes were turned to me searchingly and sharply. He took the glass from my hand and slipped it into his pocket. I made a movement to pass on, then stopped, with a faint drawing of discomfort. For the heavy figure of the captain still blocked the path.

A dark flush had come into the man's face. His yellow teeth showed between his parted lips. His eyes had a swimming brightness.

"What's your hurry?" he remarked with a certain insinuating emphasis. I began to tremble.

"I am on my way back to camp, Captain Magnus. Please let me pass." "It won't do you no harm if you're a little late. There ain't no one there keepin' tab. Ain't you always a straggle off with the Honorable? I ain't so sure, but -"

"You are impudent. Let me pass." "Oh, for impudent, am I? That seems trashy, maybe. I'm a plain man and don't use tricks on my neighbors. Well, when I meets a little skirt that takes my eye they ain't no harm in lettin' her know it's there. Maybe the Honorable could lay it out."

Why a forward skirt he laid a hand upon my arm. I shook him off and stepped back. Fear clutched my throat. I had left my revolver in my quarters. Oh, the dreadful absence of these weeks, the certainty that no student of mine could please them! - And then Cruso, who had been waiting quietly behind me in the path, slipped in between us. Every hair on his neck was bristling. The lifted upper lip showed immovably. He gave me a swift glance which said, "Shall I spring?"

Quite suddenly the gorilla bloodthirstiness of Captain Magnus came to an end.

"Say, he said sarcastically, 'Laid back that dog, will you? I don't want to kill the cur.'"

"You laid better out," I returned coldly. "I should have to explain to"

What's Your Nutty? He remarked.

If happened, you know. As it is I shall say nothing. But I shall not forget my revolver again when I go to work."

And Cruso and I went swiftly down the path while the captain no longer disputed.

Long ago the taboo was placed upon wearing a skirt and blouse without a jacket on the street. But you needn't sweater if you wear one of those thin developments of the sweater. Mohair in open weaves is popular, one lovely lavender lightweight sweater having a white silk shawl on laced collar and cuffs. While white sweaters are shown in the thinnest weaves the really smart silk sweaters do not appear to be made.

NEW YORK, Aug. 10 - Gold shipments from Europe are being handled by the U. S. Treasury as the valuable arrival of dollars which is the primary moral element in the world's supply.

It was recently announced that the U. S. Treasury vaults hold already more than $1,000,000,000 in gold, one fifth of the world's entire supply.

Gold is classified as freight and certain rate per ton is paid for transporting it, although due to its value special consideration is given to its safety.

On arrival in New York the gold shipments receive the attention of a special force of longshoremen under the supervision of a company which is representative of the bank to which the gold is assigned.

Gold shipments which have gone down are occupying the attention of scores of marine experts today. Numerous boats have been patrolled and many lives have been lost in attempts to salvage sunken treasure.

On arrival in New York the gold shipments receive the attention of a special force of longshoremen under the supervision of a company which is representative of the bank to which the gold is assigned.
