A BELOVED THIEF

One of the lesser subjects which engaged attention at the farmers' round-up in Lansing was whether, on the whole, the robin might not be put into the category of malefactor and supposess. That he is a thief there is not the slightest doubt in the world. Any man who owns a cherry tree can swear to it. And what is more, he is a glutton for cherries who stuffs himself full, and when that is accomplished retires to a convenient perch where the rapid procession of avian digestion prepares him for another raid. After that he dives into the trash box for cherries, and he will keep at it as long as there cherries left.

Against this indictment the department of agriculture can produce impressive statistics showing that robins also eat a great many things that farmers are glad to be rid of.

Yet, it would probably go hard with the birds if their case were left to be decided upon argument alone. But robins are their own best advocates. They come in the spring—vandalism that they are—and start a deeply planned campaign to entitle every body's friendship. The deep woods knows them not; they never skulk in the bushes, nor flee the presence of man. Instead they choose the lawn for a hunting ground, build their nests even on porches and window-sills, and never let the sun go down without a song delivered from the most conspicuous perch on the place. The robin's cheerfulness is irresistible; his neighborliness compelling. It is absolutely impossible not to like him when he offers such convincing proofs every day that he likes men.

PRICES AND TAXES

In the course of his testimony on railroad rates before the Interstate Commerce Commission Secretary Hoover discussed the general tendency of prices in this country. Higher transportation costs, higher wages, higher profits and higher taxes imposed after the goods leave the producers' hands and before they get to the consumer in finds are the principal cause of high costs.

Some of these causes can be reached only indirectly, by the government and even taxes which are directly dependent upon government cannot be absolutely controlled by legislators. But taxes are the factor which can be most easily and directly reached by common action, and they are no small part of the whole. Mr. Hoover said that the total increase in national, state and municipal taxes since 1913 is $5,610,000,000, enough to run the national government in normal times for five years, and that sum is being exacted from the taxpayer every year. It amounts to about 10 per cent of all that the nation produces, which means that the country is giving one whole year out of every 10 for increased taxes.

Such facts are sufficiently impressive to give a new interest even to so old a subject as the demand for economy in public expenditure.

PURITY IN ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA

It doesn't entirely a matter of clothes, undoubtedly the Purity League of St. Petersburg, Florida, can put up a pretty good argument as backing for its demand on the mayor of the town that a bathing suit censorship be instituted so that defenseless married women may be preserved from the wiles of "pretty sea nymphs." Because some of the Florida beach pictures that get into the Sunday brown section are, to say the least, frank. But we fear the action of the St. Petersburg leaguers may be inspired by virtue for the fate of the bathers, the unashamed portion of masculinity, seems to be a matter-of-fact indifference to the good ladies.

The single-men aren't even mentioned, and we are left to infer that the "vamps" might go as far as they like if they would confine themselves to miles still outside the bonds of matrimony. From which circumstance we are moved to ask whether the Purity League of the Florida watering place shouldn't really be called the Association of Jealous and Unloved Wives? And come to think of it, doesn't worship of the Green-Eyed Monster rather frequently pass for worship of Purity?

LIQUOR LAWS IN NEW JERSEY

The Supreme court of New Jersey has now declared the prohibition enforcement law of that state invalid. It was passed by the extreme drys. In cases where the prohibition law was alleged to have been violated it removed the safeguards against unreasonable search and seizure, denied the right of trial by jury and abolished the presumption of innocence. In a state which had a wet governor and legislature, a year before, passed an act legalizing two-and-a-half per cent beer, notwithstanding the Volstead act, this enforcement law was astonishing. Perhaps it is best viewed as a penalty incurred by the state for going to extremes.

The enforcement law was finical, but it followed a lawless policy on the part of those who did not like the Volstead act. Over both sides stood the courts and however greatly some people may admire those systems of government in which legislatures make their own constitutions, they cannot deny that judges may become an important check upon extremists of every kind. New Jersey's alternating liquor policies are proof enough of the need of that proposition.

An eastern writer rises to remark that Shackleton might have lived longer if he had chosen a career involving less hardship. Possibly, but he would not have lived nearly so much. Probably like Theodore Roosevelt he preferred to wear out rather than rust out.

Now that the open door in China is firmly established, perhaps the people of that country will import a little chop suey in order to find out how it tastes.

Something to Think About
By F. A. WALKER

NOT ON BREAD ALONE

HERE is within all of us an ever-growing appetite which craves substantial nourishment for the soul.

A sumptuous table heaped with palatable delicacies fails utterly to satisfy this hunger.

With all our carnal gluttony we find ourselves at certain periods of our existence yearning for spiritual food.

Wealth and luxury leave but an emptiness; poverty and sorrow distress and harden our hearts; the world is a cheat—a bubble that eludes us and leaves us in vagueness.

We may be talebearers, flatters and thieves, but in our serious moments there comes upon us an overwhelming longing for something that will appease our appetite, besides bread alone.

We wish for the sustenance in which Truth and Mercy are blended, that our souls may be satisfied, and our fever cooled. In ten thousand detectable forms it is spread out before us, but we rebel against accepting it.

Though we may be starving and weak to the point of falling we refuse to eat.

In our misery and weariness we receive the everlasting Voice of Nature to tell us to seek repose, yet in strange perverseness we fight to keep awake.

From all around us comes the call to the feast.

It comes from the silent, sunny nights, from the boisterous days; from the shimmering silver streams; from the dashing leaves of the forests; from songs of birds and sighing winds, but our eyes are heavy and our ears are dull.

Right at our elbows is a dust-covered volume filled with uplifting encouragement and fatherly love, intended for guidance to the very happiness we desire.

But we let this great book lie in a dark corner untouched while we continue to stumble on and on for peace.

We refuse to open our eyes when we ought to be wide awake; we decline to close them when we ought to be asleep; we are wholly headstrong and obstinate upon having our own way.

We see not the good, but wrong and sin with evil.

We are human, but within each one of us there burns the spark of divinity, and we must until this spark shall be fanned by our own hand, cast aside, and kept burning by simple prayer and faith shall our hunger be fully satisfied.

THE FRIENDLY PATH

By WALTER I. ROBINSON

"HE often stood beside his gate, an honest-faced old man."

The unknown author of these lines introduces a character known to everyone who generally loves. In every community there may be found the aged man, with the happy smiling face. The world has not showered a great amount of wealth upon him. He has gone through trouble and sickness. He stands upon his worn cane before the limeade stand and is smiles and chats in his quaint fashion whenever one passes the gate.

Many who are mere fortunate than he feel more cheerful when they receive his greeting. They understand that, he has come to the evening of his life without filling up riches and without winning wide honor. They are battling unceasingly to win both. They cannot find the cause for the peaceful look on the old man's face. They cannot imagine anyone being happy in his declining years without accomplishing much that they aim to gain.

If one asked this familiar character to explain the cause for his apparent content, he probably could not comply with the request. The reason is so simple that even he does not recognize it.

He has acquired what neither money nor honor can buy. He has lived an honest life and looks the world squarely in the face. Countless persons are his trustful friends. Looking much that others possess, he nevertheless has a clear conscience and his mind is at rest. The smiles he receives from the populace are the blessings which his own hearted friendlessness has brought him to bring sunshine into his few remaining days or years.

The world needs to catch the spirit of his kindly old soul. One is poor indeed, regardless of his accumulation of gold, or his poverty, if he approaches the end of the path without sincere friends.

GRIFFITH GENIUS SHOWS STRONGEST IN WAY DOWN EAST

Regarded as the Greatest Picture This Wizard of Film-land Has Ever Made.

It is a bolding the mirror up to Nature that D. W. Griffith is a genius. True, he uses first of all a story of intense human interest, but, under his hand, drama becomes transmuted to gold and a tale that might seem merely melodrama becomes a human document.

In times gone by he received unfeeling tributes to his art and to his achievement, but not in all his career has he been so generally commended and so frequently a recipient of praise as since the revealing to the public of "Way Down East," which will be the feature at the Delta Theatre Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week.

Ministers in New York City and in hundreds of other places who attended special matinées of "Way Down East" wrote testimonial upon the picture.

Thousands of laymen have also written him, but perhaps no letter, nor letter received by Mr. Griffith has given him the satisfaction and the exultation of feeling that came when he last read the following signed anonymous letter: "A Minister's Daughter" and sent it in a fashionable envelope postmarked "My Dear Mr. Griffith."

May I thank you for sending your beautiful and wonderful picture, "Way Down East." Father took me to see it the other day.

I wish all men could see it. It is not only wonderfully beautiful but always rest—some few years ago

we should not have thought that all of it could be real.

A very dear friend whose size is similar and who is not an "actor" came to me. It seemed impossible that her, the home that the home of most families, a source of alarm simply, but somehow through this boy and the girl of a tiny, delicate, though somewhat stout body, we were able to care for her during those dreadful months without giving her the family physicians knowing. Since setting our picture a stimulus, and that always contributes greatly to her health, we have tried to get her to take those delightful pastimes. We all have great hopes that she will live long and happy.

DECALOGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS NOW LAID DOWN

NEW YORK.—A political decalogue for women has been issued by Mrs. John H. Hammond. Her cardinal principle as expressed in her "Second commandment" is that women should affiliate themselves with some party, ideally her ten commandments are:

Women must not remain in cold rats but must press forward.

Our government is necessary to keep a responsibility and get things done. A good cause gets nowhere.

We must make organization a means to an end, and never an end in itself.

We should unite with all forces of good government to get rid of the evil in the world and not waste our energy running over unimportant details.

Let us try to make our party that much stronger if we do nothing else.

We should give more time to the study of political questions and gain more historic pictures in background of our political life.

We should encourage the men to take a deeper interest in political life.

It is our duty to organize classes among our ignorant citizens.

Our greatest need is for better teachers whom when we find them, we must support.

We must be good in our political life if we would do good.

Mrs. Hammond delivered her decalogue Wednesday night at a meeting of the Republican Association here.

AMERICAN BOY IS WORRYING HOOVER WITH RADIO PHONE

Ingenuity of Youth Is Interfering With Government Development of Wireless

LESS.

BY UNIVERSAL SERVICE
WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—The device of the American small boy with his wireless telephone has given the government at its wits end, Secretary Hoover explained today.

So serious has the constant interruption of the youthful inventors become, the government has found it necessary to hold a conference of experts to work out some system of electronic legislation to stop the importation of such instruments.

As described by Mr. Hoover, the devices will prevent a disturbance in the field of international scientific and commercial telephone experts, as planned by the American Radio Service.

The latter will have a representative panel, however, in the person of the Secretary of Commerce himself. Mr. Hoover could not be reached for comment. It is to be decided whether Secretary Hoover will insist that an infinite length be reserved for the United States government should take the lead in meeting the problems concerning the invention, the general character of which is present. It was explained that the unregulated use of the wireless telephone was regarded so seriously by the government that the entire time of the last cabinet meeting was taken up with consideration of the spectroscopic conference.

To the meeting will be summoned army and navy electrical engineers, representatives of all executive departments and bureaus interested and the leading commercial telephone and wireless experts.

Peering Problems. Some of the problems are going to be most perplexing, Secretary Hoover said. At present, it is difficult to know how the law can be definitely established unless there is established a code of other sorts.

Utilization of wave lengths for commercial purposes is one plan under consideration. If this is decided upon, Secretary Hoover will insist that an infinite length be reserved for the use of the American small boy. While all the basic patents for the wireless telephone are now owned by the American Telephone & Telegraph Company, Secretary Hoover explained, that company has expressed a willingness to cooperate with the government in the development of a regular code of the device.

President Harding, in discussing the matter of the cabinet meeting, made plain that his personal view was that such a monopoly performance was not in the public interest and could not be maintained long.

Secretary Hoover said, "In the past few months, Society has been characterized as 'incredible.'

Proclaim Next Week Missouri Book Week

(By Associated Press)

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., Feb. 11.—The week of February 12 to 18 has been set aside at Missouri Book Week by gubernatorial proclamation.

The purpose is to promote good reading and to further an extension of public libraries in the state. This is the first state book week in the country and is sponsored by the Missouri Library Association.

There are 2,000 persons in Missouri without books according to Dr. R. Bandy, secretary of the Missouri Library Commission. He said there are 89 of the 115 counties of the state without a single tax-supported library.

During the week special emphasis will be made by speakers for the establishment of county libraries.
