Sic 'Em, Rum' Hound, Get That Bootlegger

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Dry commissioner Hayes is now considering the installation of a force of German rum-bounds to assist the moonshiners in his line.

This consideration resulted from a conference with Director E. H. McClellan of Colorado.

McClellan has suggested to Hayes that the department's quite German police dogs, trained to discriminate between the scent of moonshine and the scent of a good hound, add their ally to the accomplished rum-bounds to the trial of a bootlegger still.

With such a dog, the Colorado dry agent said, "he will not be separated half a mile away and will not only lead to capture but serve to secure search warrants."

WANT DELEGATES AT LEGION MEET

Posts Urged to Send Men to Iron River Conference Sunday

By Associated Press

Legion Post 100, Escanaba, has urged all the Posts of the state to send their delegates to the meeting in the Hotel Elkhorn, Escanaba, at which time arrangements will be made for the election of a national representative to the high class organization.

Considerable interest has been taken up in the meeting besides the arrangements for the construction of the Post Plaza. Delegates will receive an adjusted compensation.

It is understood that Invitations will be sent to the new State convention of the American Legion, which will be held in Toledo, Ohio, April 15-17.

The Legion is the largest organization in the country, with over 1,000,000 members.

Post 100 has been invited to speak at the meeting.

Arrangements for the establishment of the new Sons of Bier have been made. About 100 men of Marquette, Marquette City, Duluth, Superior, Duluth, Superior, and Marquette, Duluth, Superior, will be present at the meeting.

The new Legionnaires will be given a hearty welcome.

Cycling Popular in France as Recreation

(By Associated Press) PARIS, Feb. 15.—Cycling is rapidly becoming a sport among the French. States are being organized for the recreation purpose, meetings and more popular than ever in Paris. With 6,000,000 members in 100 clubs, there is a wheel to every month of the year. In France, 1,000,000 people ride their bicycles.

Racing, racing and racing are those of all other bicycle clubs.

DUTY TO ESCANABA

It is becoming increasingly apparent that the nearer the spring election approaches, and the larger the number of candidates entering the race for places on the city commission, the greater the necessity for voters to narrow their choice down to candidates of known and proven administrative ability.

It is not time for experimentation. The future of Escanaba largely rests upon the man selected to administer the affairs of this city during the initial period of commission form of government.

A great responsibility rests upon the voter.

The administration form has been repudiated by a substantial majority. The commission-manager form has been endorsed. But the duty of the voter cannot be said to end there. It is now his responsibility to see that this political, or governmental, child of which he votes is responsible, be given a fair fighting chance to grow up into a strong and sturdy maturity. This can be done only through the most careful selection of the men who will guide the destinies of this child.

Assuming that 25 or 30 candidates are in the race when election day comes, it would seem that the man who can corral 300 or 400 votes—the votes of some particular group—would be a hard man to defeat.

Interests of the various groups representing the voting strength of the city are so divergent, conflicting of widely separated that obviously it is going to be a hard matter to bring all these groups to the point of solidified action.

The rods must be faced. Candidates are going to appeal to their closest friends for support—and get it. It is beginning to assume that Smith isn't going to vote for his neighbor Brown, whom he has known for years and with whom he holds intimate friendship, but will give his vote to Green, whom he doesn't know so well, but who would seem to be better equipped for the office than Brown. Human nature is human nature to the end of the chapter.

If Escanabians to have the service of five or six men highly qualified citizens in carrying out the provisions of the new commission form of government, then Escanaba voters have got to get together and attain a result by voting.

This is the only basis upon which a good government will be had, and the benefit of its wise legislation will be made. The time for the crystallization of public sentiment is at hand right now. It is no time for temporizing. Escanaba is going to do the right thing or she isn't. There isn't any middle ground upon which to stand.

It is a delicate matter. It is more. The voter is going to record his deliberate judgment as to what is best for himself, he is going to record the depth and breadth of his interest in his city, and depending upon the depth and breadth and wisdom of that interest, just so far will his city progress, and thereby grow and prosper under the new commission manager form of government.

Old-time class, religious, cultural or nativity arguments are futile, absurd and unfair to Escanaba, if she is to be given a fighting chance to become what the supporters of the new form of government desire.

There ought to be but one test by which aspirants for the commissionership are measured—FITNESS.

The first year is going to be the hardest; it's going to require the biggest, bravest men with the poorest balance and bairns—experience following successful conduct of their own affairs, to put the year over successfully.

Are we to have politics or are we to have service to the community, established as the outstanding feature of the coming election?

DOUGH FOR DOUGBOYS

The position of congress is becoming painful in its embarrassment as the time approaches for decision on the subject of adjusted compensation for the soldiers. Congressmen are torn between love and duty—love of their jobs and love of the soldiers who risked those jobs, duty to their constituents and duty to the veterans; love of themselves and duty to their country.

They want to do what is right, but they are in great distress in the matter of deciding what is right, says The Chicago Tribune. Therefore, they are now trying to pass the buck to President Harding. They know he, in common with important business men such as Secretary Mellon, in both official and private life, John E. Ferguson, president of the National Association of Manufacturers, and others of more or less note, oppose the special taxation designed to finance the measure and is doubtful of the advisability of a bond issue. They hope then combat reputations are safe in his hands. Feeling that he has political responsibilities similar to their own, they hope their political reputations will also be safe.

Perhaps they are right, but we doubt it. Either the house is a good thing or it is not. Either we owe the soldiers the debt and should pay it, or we do not and should not. Efforts to satisfy both the pros and cons will be futile. Efforts to extract the necessary funds painlessly from the public are ridiculous.

Why cannot congress look at the matter squarely on the light? Efforts to put the responsibility upon the President are unfair. After all, congress, not the President, must pass the legislation. The congressmen should make up their mind what should be done, do it, and take the consequences.

The issue is clear cut. These soldiers made possible the continuance of business and private lives from which the money to compensate them will be sought. Without the sacrifices of these soldiers our whole political and economic structure would be on the verge if not in the depths of ruin. We owe them a sacrifice in turn. It is a much small sacrifice than the one we asked of them. Let us make it, and cancel this great debt insolvent as possible.

If they had failed it would have brought ruin to the nation. If we fail it will cloud our good name and weaken our prospect of adequate defense for years to come. Most of them need the money. Few will deny that. Most of us can supply our share of the money. Many of us will get it straight back from the beneficiaries. Let congress go ahead and authorize the action and cease this undignified sidestepping between politics, duty, expediency, and justice.

Story of Leonard T. Pauli,
Grinnell College's Crack
Athlete, Reads Like a Novel

GRINNELL, Iowa, Feb. 18.— Leonard T. Pauli, Grinnell College crack sprinter, whose war experience, recent marriage to a disabled widow, and personal misfortune have cast him into the shadows of oblivion, is an interesting story about services to his country and to Grinnell. At the time of his marriage to Pauli, back in 1918, when there were reaching the 100th day figure of his 100th running event, Pauli determined he could continue his amateur career after the September attack at St. Mihiel, in France, in which he was severely wounded in the left leg. But on the day of his return to the States he discovered he had a sharp turn leg, and a resulting lack of coordination forced him to give up sprinting.

Saved By Surgery
Surgeon still saved the sight of his left eye and almost completely repair'd his damaged leg. But on this day Pauli realized that in his left leg he was left for naught. He seemed right.

Returning to Grinnell College where he had spent all his youth every summer except at his military service, Pauli started in to work as a waiter till his fame
