The Legend of the Birth of the Great Spring.

BY KATE E. TULEY.

RIAWATHA Far to the north there grew a, dens Far to the north there grew a dense and gloomy forest. Great waters stretched beyond it to the north and to the south, and made in open highway over which, with resistless fury, traveled the invisible powers of the ar. These best and battled with the great wood maining and decroping ruthbasty. But the frost way water decrease.

But the ferest was watched overar conderly guarded by the Great Spir.

The birds grow to be inferted with the terror and unrest, and flew far the terror and turest, and flew his away where there was space and smlight. Only the 'erow, "Kaknik." the raven of the north, flapped his wings above it, and in barsh sarceaste tones advised them to strant closer, and prophesid evil days to come. The friendly squirrel, "Cheecheetl.," under them flying visits and rallied and scolded them for their fears; but his trates ran to more cheerful. and scolded them for their fears; but his tastes ran to more cheerful company, and the trees were in to mood to listen to his idle chatter, so his visits became fewer and fewer. Now far to the north-of-the forest Anxonores regarding the last days of the late Emperor Frederick of Germany continue to multiply. Not long before his death he gave audience to a little English boy, six years old, who had undergone the operation of trachectomy about a year ago. The boy had not oily survived the operation, but had grown stong and healthy. Emperor Frederick heard of the case, and dealing to see him padd his expenses from London to Potsdam. He examined the child's throat and heard him talk, while the Empress Victoria him talk, while the Empress Victoria plied him with bonbons that he might show him how well he could swallow.

Some important experiments have been made at the Shoeburynes school of guinney in high angie firing. The experiments were made with the nino-incher jawent-three continueter gun used as a howitzer. An elevation of hirty-seven degrees was given, and battering charges were used with Palliser siells. Out of four shots three fell within a space of five hundred feet by eighty feet, representing the deek of a first-class iron-olad, and the range attained, was twoive miles. What is very important, too, is that the heavy charges and the high angle did not strain either gun or carriage in the least and forty-five degrees of clovation without injury; while with a range of forty-five degrees a range of inter swontier would be secured. Now, as diffeon miles, a ship is "hull down," so it has come to this that we can threw a mine-inch sholl on to the deek of a ship before we can see it.

Give the President unlimited power to retaliate for the seizure of American ssels in Canadian waters, and then not a single step would be taken by him to retaliate. That is not what his message means. All he seeks to do is to detract attention from the tariff an issue that is leading him to an inglorious defeat.

General Butler said in an interview with the Boston Advertiser or Friday: "Now I say that unless this Friday: "Now I say that unless this country is ready to fall lack into her condition in 1774, the Democratic party will be beaten, in my judgment. The Democratic party in the north has been, ever since Jackson, in favor of a turlif for revenue and incidental protection. The southern confedency put-ti-tin-their constitution that there should not be such a thing as a tariff for protection under their empire of slavery. There is the condition of things and the people must choose." General Butler said in an interview

"When we consider the patronage of "When we consider the patronage of this great office, the allurements of power, the tymptation to retain public place once gained, and more than all, the availability a party finds in an incumbent whom a horde of officeholders, with a zeal born of benefits received and foszeal horn of bonelits received and fos-tered by the hope of favors yet to come, stand ready to aid with money and trainel political service, we recognize in the eligibility of the president for re-election a myst serious danger to that calm, deliberate and intelligent action which must characterize government by the people,"—From President Clev-ciant's letter of acceptance, Aug. 18,

One of the unaccountable methods in the free trade proposals is the proposals to the proposals to the design the necessaries of life in this country, without reducing the wages of the laborors engaged in producing them. The necessaries of life in this country are the food the workman eatis, the clothes on his Back, the entry that the body and the proposal to the fact that the wages of laborers are highest when the laborer is employed in the production of the inhorers are highest when the laborer is employed in the production of the things which the laborer himself uses. The American laborers (with the exception of the coffee, tea, and sugar) make all these commodities now, and all of them which are consumed in the average American family are already as cheap in this market as in any other in the world. Taking the laborers together, they are distributed through these industries, and the wages are equalized as fully as the perfect mobility of labor between the different industries will permit. If wages in one industry are reduced, they will be reduced in all. Any injury to one class will be felt by all.

Commodities are as cheap now as they can be, unless they are cheapened at the cost of a reduction of the laborers wages. He cannot increase them except by the exercise of more skill or more effort. If clothes, and hats, and shoes, and carpots, and dishes are to be make in foreign countries because they can be made cheaper there, then the makers of these things, on the free trade economists' theory, ought to live in the foreign country. He must, therefore, under free trade ether expairate thinself, or find "something clas" to do, and make the things with which he can buy them. Commodities are as cheap now as the which he can buy them.

Gilding a Dome.

The work of gliding the dome of the Massachusetts state house will, according to the contractor, occupy litteen men about forty days of nine hourse each. The dome, he says, from pitte-upthe peak to base must betheroughly cleaned, and avery particle of glit and verilgris removed as weel, and all rough spots make smooth. After this has been done the copper surface will be polished to the smoothness of glass, and then given a ceating of size, over which will be a layer of yellow paint. When this has partially set the surface will be ready for the gliders. Two hundred and forty lacks of 2-learnt goldled will be required. This is within one carat of pure gold, the whole-weighing about three and one-half pounds tow weight. Each package contains twenty-lour books, composed of tissue paper, between the leaves of which are twenty sheets of gold, each sheet being about 323 inches or a little over nine and three-fourths square inches. So thin are these sheets that 1,000 of themplied one upon the other makes only an inch in height.
