Arrowoods are covering their large hall with sheet steel, and covering the sides with the same material so that at a distance it will look like a brick structure. That material is very cheap and it kept properly painted, will last a long time. This plan will be watched with considerable interest by those who contemplate building in that part of town in the near future.

Our candidate for Secretary of State, Hon. John W. Jochim, of Ishpeming, will be here next week. We cannot at this writing give the exact date, but when he comes we want every Scandinavian voter in the county to meet him. As soon as we learn the time bills will be issued so that none need be in doubt as to the date. He will probably be accompanied by Marcus Peterson, a gentleman well known to many of our citizens. Give these gentlemen a rousing welcome.

A. S. Byers, Chairman of the late county convention of the People's Party requests us to say that the report as published in the "News" was a gross misrepresentation of the facts. That there were several prominent Republicans present and that some of them were there upon his invitation, and that the men who took part in that convention, either voluntarily or by invitation, do not belong to the so-called gang that paper refers to. That paper charges men with making motions that never made them, and gives utterances to many other foul slanders. The Republican nominees that were endorsed by that convention are too well known here to afford a shadow of doubt as to their honesty or integrity, and they cannot be charged, truthfully, with being connected in any way with the "gang." Mr. Byers says truthfully that that convention was grossly misrepresented by that paper, and that it should receive the condemnation of every upright citizen.

Republicans fall in for work. The election is only a few weeks off and there is much to be done. The ticket is a clean one from President to coroner, thoroughly republican, backed up by high and honorable principles that must be sustained. Our opponents on the contrary, have a ticket that is weak, terrible weak, from head to foot. It will be defeated, if Republicans will do their whole duty.

Hunters from all parts of the country are making for the woods between the two railroads. Quite a large party are in the vicinity of Murphy lake.

Dr. Hafford was called and attended to dressing of the broken limb. It will be a long time before the young man will recover the use of that leg.

HUNTING FOR BISON.

DR. CARVER GIVES SOME OF HIS EXPERIENCES.

The way of the bison is not to be followed by the hunter...

When the hour of twilight comes, the bison is not to be followed...

The value of the moon to general science is conceded. To a great extent it is the key to the secrets of the stars...

It is a false economy to put off incurring an obligation which sooner or later must be met...

Steam has lightened the labors of man and beast in almost every capacity except that of propelling road vehicles...

There is considerable truth in the words of an exchange, which says: "Men who are always talking about what they are going to do..."

It is a mistake to suppose that Siberia is a desert, or a glacier, or a mountain fastness...

Dr. Carver gives some of his experiences in hunting for bison...

"What I remember of my first hunt for bison was that I had a companion with a Chicago man to kill a few bison...

The manner in which we used to go about it was first sight our buffaloes, and then start for them...

The horses I rode were trained buffalo hunters and required very little guiding...

Stream has lightened the labors of man and beast in almost every capacity except that of propelling road vehicles...

"I shot a remarkably big cow that way one morning, and after being satisfied that she was hit turned my attention to an old running jack ahead on the other side of the horse...

"The hide hunters pursued very nearly the same tactics as we observed, having wagons and skinner to follow after them, the principal difference being that they would generally kill more buffaloes than the meat hunters...

"The only direct attack that was ever made on me by an Indian was upon the Medicine. I was centering around one afternoon toward a canyon where I had seen a bunch of buffaloes disappear...

"Of course I immediately began looking in all directions for an enemy, but saw none, consequently the conclusion is that the shot had been fired by an Indian from a great distance, probably not less than a mile away...

"If the most and hide hunters in the early days could only have known as much as we know now they might have all been millionaires by saving the heads and having them mounted...

"I did a good deal of trapping along the springs, principally at the beaver dams, and I am told by some of the boys who have been up still plenty of beaver in that section...

IT WAS ALL RIGHT.

A Hero Who Fought His Way Carrying a Hercules Bar.

A young fellow six feet tall and weighing 200 pounds not long ago applied to a Detroit merchant for a position in his store...

"What's your name?" inquired the merchant. "Little Dickie Robinson," replied the young man promptly.

"What's in your name?" inquired the merchant in astonishment as he surveyed his proportions. "Little Dickie Robinson," was the reply...

"It's this way he said, quite good-naturedly, my mother's maiden name was Little my father's name was Robinson and his mother's maiden name was Dickey...

The explanation was eminently satisfactory; so was the young man, and he is going to work soon.

GRAINS OF GOLD. A Ho a mile away looks a good deal like the truth.

Had men are the most anxious to be well thought of. Give a man room enough and it will run itself to death.

Self-conceit has done as much to help the devil as whiskey. The only reason why all men do not hate sin is because they can not see its face.

Higher criticism has not yet done a thing to make men more patient on washday. No man can get very much of an education without going to school to his mistakes.

A creed is something that concerns a man's intellect; religion is a thing of the heart. Statues are molded with little touches. Characters are formed the same way.

There is both joy and sadness in the wonderful truth that whatever we sow we shall reap. It is hard to believe that a man who doesn't agree with us can be altogether right in his heart.

There isn't anything we know that somebody else has to burn their fingers to find out. The devil gets many a good "boost" from the man who thinks that it is religious to wear a long face.

STRIKERS GO TO WORK.

Mills at Marinette and Mesomine Running Again.

MANHATTAN, Wis., Sept. 17.—The nine mills at Marinette are running and most of them with full crews. There has been no interference by strikers...

Most of them were glad to go to work. The examination of these arrested will be to-day. The mill owners have made no concessions. Everything is quiet...

Some of the strikers refuse to go to work until Colburn and Lewis are released, and have appointed a committee to wait upon the mill owners to this effect...

We learn that J. Maurice Finn is to speak here on the evening of the 8th.

Good republican news comes from all quarters these days notwithstanding the quietness of the campaign, and especially from New York, without which Cleveland cannot possibly be elected. Secretary McComas, of the national committee, who came over to add his mite towards helping the republican candidate in his old Maryland Congressional district, adjacent to the District of Columbia, says the work of the campaign is in splendid condition and that victory is as nearly assured as anything political can be in advance of the counting of the votes. Ex-Congressman Farquhar, of New York, who has been in Washington for several days, says that state is bound to cast its electoral votes for Harrison and Reid, unless the democrats of New York city can get away with the 80,000 majority which the republicans will bring down to the Harlem river, and he has not the remotest idea that they can come within 30,000 of doing it.

General Dan Sickles, who was one of the Tammany delegates to the Chicago convention, excited much comment among his republican comrades en-campment by praising the soldierly qualities of General Harrison, and by his laying particular stress upon the fact that he fought for the Union instead of hiring a substitute as Mr. Cleveland did. This, taken in connection with the dislike which Gen. Sickles is known to feel towards the democratic nominee, caused the prediction to be frequently made that before election day he would be openly working for Harrison and Reid; and he is not by any means the only democratic member of the G. A. R., who dislikes Mr. Cleveland. Hundred of them stated while here that they could not bring themselves to support a man like Mr. Cleveland when his opponent was a comrade whose bravery they had seen tested and proven on the field of battle, and not a few of them announced their determination to work and vote for Comrade Harrison, and this, mind you, was without any solicitation from their republican comrades, for no partisan political talk was indulged in at the encampment; the veterans were not here on a political errand, but to join their old war time comrades and to have a good time and they did precisely what they came for and nothing else.

COMMERCIAL PEST.

When their fellows persecuted with a list of candidates to vote for this year.

Springfield (Ill.) State Journal.

Property of Home Peace Abroad.

Harrison's candidacy stands for property at home and peace abroad. The survival of domestic industries under the tariff is certain, and it would be a piece of inconceivable stupidity on the part of the American people to place in power the party that proposes to repeal it and to open the floodgates of foreign competition with American labor.—Norristown (Pa.) Herald.

When Hill begins to boom Cleveland you may know that a corrupt bargain has been made. That is all he is waiting for.—Trenton State Gazette.

It is important to the industrial and social health of the nation that the ship Free Trade should be halted at protection island and prevented from landing her passengers and cargo as it would be a physical health that the Korovian should be held down the harbor and prevented from scattering the cholera germs among our people.

The free trade bacillus is known to be deadly to the prosperity of every country where it obtains a foothold. The Golden rule is its place of origin and as a destroyer of American manufactures its ravages, if it ever gains an entrance to this country, will be terrible. In 1846, under what was known as the Walker tariff, the British commercial cholera broke out "in our midst," and from that date on for a long period the mortality among our leading industries was great.

The usual symptoms of this dreaded germ of American business were rapidly developed. The pulse of trade grew steadily feebler, paralysis of the nerve centers of business followed and in 1857 the whole industrial and commercial system, surcharged with the British free trade germ, collapsed with a financial crash that will always remain among the darkest memories of our history.

Again we are threatened with a similar visitation of this fearful plague. The Democratic party is full of the Cobden germ, and frankly avows its purpose to abolish the McKinley quarantine and allow the British "free trade" ship, with the same old commercial cholera on board, to pass Protection island unmolested.

If this ship that has sailed to its mast-head the legend, "Death to American industries," is not halted by the imperious voice of the people at the polls next November, there is a sorry time ahead for them. The "pestilence that walketh by night" is not more deadly to human life than a "tariff for revenue only" will be to both capital and labor.

The British press may well watch with eager and hopeful interest the Democratic effort to break down the protective system, which has for thirty years served as a most effective quarantine against the invasion of British cheap goods, made by British cheap labor, working for British cheap wages.

It means renewed vitality and vigor for British industries if this country shall elect Grover Cleveland, with a mandate to let down the tariff bars and let in the food of foreign pauper competition upon American factories and workshops and the working people employed therein.

The American workmen, however, can hold the free trade plague at bay if they choose. The quarantine station will not be abandoned if they say that it shall not be. Protection island is in their hands. They can halt the British ship, with its pestilential doctrine that a protective tariff is unconstitutional, if they determine to do it. Self preservation is nature's first law, and of course they will maintain the quarantine that defends their wages, their homes and their families.—New York Recorder.

Wages in Woolen Factories.

According to the British board of trade, a government body, the average wages paid in British woolen factories are about $292 a year. The average yearly earnings in New York state, according to returns made to Labor Commissioner Peck by manufacturers in reply to circulars (the method adopted also by the British board of trade) were $298.08 in 1891.—New York Press.

The Democratic Boom in Montana.

Montana Democrats have never shown any great admiration for Grover Cleveland. In the Chicago convention Montana gave her solid vote for Boies and was for nothing to test the staid prophet. After Bourke Cockran made a speech pulverizing Grover, Montanians took to Cockran and cast their vote for him for vice president, although it was known that he was ineligible. Clark and Shere can raise no boom in Montana.—Chicago Labor Ocean.

They Will Not Forget.

The Illinois Gerbines whom the Democrats are trying to inveigle into helping them out of the slough of despair are the same men who were driven out of Missouri during the war by other Democrats because they were loyal to the Union cause. It is very kind in the Illinois Democrats to present the men when their fellows persecuted with a list of candidates to vote for this year.

IN THE CAMPANILE

In that oldest city of Northern Italy, Padua, a party of travelers was discussing its relations with Venice and the mission of Shakespeare's character, Portia, going from Padua, her home, to Venice, the home of her lover. Being only twenty-five miles distant the writer remarks that there should be a possibility of tracing the winding road between and catching a glimpse of the towers of Padua from the observatory of the Campanile or bell-tower of Venice, which is about 300 feet high.

An alteration in the countenance of the writer's friend attracted attention. He was a gentleman from England, just beyond the prime of life, of ordinary stature, strong build, muscular texture, kindly countenance and hair white as the driven snow. He sat so motionless, but presently spoke, and told a story which is here given as he told it.

"Yes," said he, "I have experienced the emotions of the sublime while standing in that great observatory. But once, a number of years ago. I met with an experience up there which haunts all my recollections of the place with a shadow of an absolute horror. I had been loitering about the city for a number of days in the early summer when there arrived at my hotel a gentleman from my own country. He was in every way a well-bred man, almost a giant in stature, handsome in his face graceful in his movements, powerful in his build. His manners were elegant, his dress faultless and his conversation polished, yet flexible, with a slight swing of humor.

"We strolled out together through those winding streets where you have just been wandering. Soon after noon of a bright and cloudless day it was suggested that we take a view from the Campanile. A few minutes later, we were ascending the winding footway which, instead of a stairway, leads to the top. The lofty heights, nearly 300 feet, and the scenes which spread out beneath excited my friend. We looked over the roofs of the famous city, over the dreamy isles, over the gleaming Adriatic, over the fair stretching plains of Italy, away to the Alps, their tremendous proportions barricading the view in that direction and the snowy peaks glistening in the sunlight, and softening the intense blue of the sky.

"My friend was greatly agitated. He expressed his delight in fluent phrase, which became more and more intense. The vast mountain ranges affected him and he dilated on their sublimity. His eyes swept rapidly over the sparkling water, and a ship, with all sails set, standing out clear and grand, gave him a new object of talk. His voice resonant at first, became thin and harsh. His eyes fell on the lagoon, and instantly he paused. Then it was directed to the gondollers plying their craft at the entrance of the grand canal. He quickly resumed his talk, and I noticed now that he became more and more rambling and incoherent. He grazed down on the Doge's palace, and then swept around with a glance over the city to the left.

"A flock of pigeons, famous for their associations with the piazza of St. Mark, whirled through the air and swept downward, lighting on the roofs of the adjacent palaces. My companion had been mixing criticism and praise and interjecting the most foreign ideas into his rapid talk which grew more and more grotesque, and His cheeks burned and his eyes glistened, but the whirl and swoop of the pigeons completely unbalanced him, and he rushed to the opposite corner of the observatory, exclaiming: 'There they go! I knew I would find them. Ha! ha! ha!'

"I had been in a more critical mood. I would sooner have noticed the strangeness of his actions and speech. But my suspicions came slowly, yet instantly his wild run and metallic cry and laugh forced the conviction upon me that he was mad.

"He stood trembling leaning out over the railing and looking down, blurring out exclamations after exclamations of exaltation. Then like a flash he recoiled and perished what he took to be a blow, glancing with intense gaze into the air, now this way, now that way, crying out: 'Avanti, I'll not go with thee! Get thee away from me!' Begone, this is not the time! All the while he was springing backward and sideward and warding off some unseen object which appeared to him to be moving in the air toward him.

"I tell thee I will not go. Go! In his twisting movements he had got

...of the eye, and is the only one that does not become soiled or stained when wet. It is also the only one that does not become soiled or stained when wet.

"I saw slowly, with two or three steps toward me, and the next upon his face grew blacker. A series of accusations he made against me: 'You took her away. You defamed me at the elections. You plotted against my life. You hired those brutes to kill me.'

"This followed a volley of awful profanity. He was swaying to the right and left; then like a flash he sprang upon me. I felt his cold hands upon my neck, and realized the vile-like character of his grip. But my quick movement put me out of line and I never worked myself loose from his grasp and sprang to one side, laughingly remarking:

"You're pretty quick and strong."

"Yes, and I'm ugly strong too," he responded.

"It is while the madman's eyes like live coals burned the horror of their gaze into my very soul as he fixed them unwaveringly upon me. He caught me glancing furtively at the exit, and his suspicions were immediately aroused.

"Ha! ha! ha! he chuckled, with fiendish glee as his face distorted itself in an appalling shape. 'You can't get away from me this time. I have you sure now—dead sure—dead sure.'

His tall form began to undulate like the movement of a snake's sinuous body as it crawls along the ground. His hands reached out in wild speculation toward me, taking on the shape of a condor's talons, and again reminding me of the claws of a tiger. His manure were convulsed, and his arm movements were all stealthy. He would approach and recede, make a feint toward me, raise his towering form over me, and crouch low.

"Out of this by-play he rushed at me again, crying: 'No! I have you!' But I dexterously evaded him, and, feigning to be amused, said, laughingly: 'You must do better than that. Stop fooling and get down to business.'

"He seemed to be caught with a slight sense of the humorous for he laughed, but I knew all the while that he was merely playing with me as a cat toys with a mouse. The laugh on his face quickly gave way to a malicious scowl, which was rapidly succeeded by a sardonic grin of gloating exultation, and he strode up to me in full height of his great stature, squared himself and began to rain down blows upon me which bore down my guard with terrific force, struck my head and would, if they had continued, have felled me to the floor.

"My case was getting desperate. I knew that I could not divert him much longer, for his fury was increasing and I would be utterly at his mercy. I was getting reckless. I let out the first thought which came into my mind.

"You are not scientific in using your fists. You break the Marquis of Queensberry's rules," I declared, and immediately I was surprised at myself for saying that. But it had the effect of making him stop for a moment and commence an incoherent criticism on the Marquis of Queensberry, who he denounced with the most awful profanity.

"And so you propose to champion the marquis do you?" exclaimed the maniac, while his head, stooped in a frenzy of anger. His lips were tightly drawn across his teeth, his hair bristled up and his breath, came short and thick and his huge form heaved and withered with the frenzy of a demon.

"I shall never forget that twitching, contorted, livid visage with his glaring eye-balls, red as live coals of fire, glowering down upon me. I felt that the end was near and I would not have given a shilling for my life. He lunged toward me. Involuntarily I lifted my hand to ward off his movement. He seized my wrist and lifted me bodily from the floor up in front of him. Into my appalled face he thrust his leering and wrinkled features, his breath hot as steam, blown upon my cheek while he laughed that horrid chuckling rattling concatenation of sounds emitted by the organs of speech when reason has been dethroned and the beast has absorbed every other element. The extreme violence of this ravenous laugh brought on a spell of coughing and he lowered me to the floor. He let go one hand, and when in another paroxysm I twisted my other wrist from his grasp, he removed his eye from me and the coughing having passed he closed on me again. All the resources of boxing which I was master of were brought into exercise.

"A sudden hope sprang up in my breast that I might be able to deal

...of the eye, and is the only one that does not become soiled or stained when wet. It is also the only one that does not become soiled or stained when wet.

"I saw slowly, with two or three steps toward me, and the next upon his face grew blacker. A series of accusations he made against me: 'You took her away. You defamed me at the elections. You plotted against my life. You hired those brutes to kill me.'

"This followed a volley of awful profanity. He was swaying to the right and left; then like a flash he sprang upon me. I felt his cold hands upon my neck, and realized the vile-like character of his grip. But my quick movement put me out of line and I never worked myself loose from his grasp and sprang to one side, laughingly remarking:

"You're pretty quick and strong."

"Yes, and I'm ugly strong too," he responded.

"It is while the madman's eyes like live coals burned the horror of their gaze into my very soul as he fixed them unwaveringly upon me. He caught me glancing furtively at the exit, and his suspicions were immediately aroused.

"Ha! ha! ha! he chuckled, with fiendish glee as his face distorted itself in an appalling shape. 'You can't get away from me this time. I have you sure now—dead sure—dead sure.'

His tall form began to undulate like the movement of a snake's sinuous body as it crawls along the ground. His hands reached out in wild speculation toward me, taking on the shape of a condor's talons, and again reminding me of the claws of a tiger. His manure were convulsed, and his arm movements were all stealthy. He would approach and recede, make a feint toward me, raise his towering form over me, and crouch low.

"Out of this by-play he rushed at me again, crying: 'No! I have you!' But I dexterously evaded him, and, feigning to be amused, said, laughingly: 'You must do better than that. Stop fooling and get down to business.'

"He seemed to be caught with a slight sense of the humorous for he laughed, but I knew all the while that he was merely playing with me as a cat toys with a mouse. The laugh on his face quickly gave way to a malicious scowl, which was rapidly succeeded by a sardonic grin of gloating exultation, and he strode up to me in full height of his great stature, squared himself and began to rain down blows upon me which bore down my guard with terrific force, struck my head and would, if they had continued, have felled me to the floor.

"My case was getting desperate. I knew that I could not divert him much longer, for his fury was increasing and I would be utterly at his mercy. I was getting reckless. I let out the first thought which came into my mind.

"You are not scientific in using your fists. You break the Marquis of Queensberry's rules," I declared, and immediately I was surprised at myself for saying that. But it had the effect of making him stop for a moment and commence an incoherent criticism on the Marquis of Queensberry, who he denounced with the most awful profanity.

"And so you propose to champion the marquis do you?" exclaimed the maniac, while his head, stooped in a frenzy of anger. His lips were tightly drawn across his teeth, his hair bristled up and his breath, came short and thick and his huge form heaved and withered with the frenzy of a demon.

"I shall never forget that twitching, contorted, livid visage with his glaring eye-balls, red as live coals of fire, glowering down upon me. I felt that the end was near and I would not have given a shilling for my life. He lunged toward me. Involuntarily I lifted my hand to ward off his movement. He seized my wrist and lifted me bodily from the floor up in front of him. Into my appalled face he thrust his leering and wrinkled features, his breath hot as steam, blown upon my cheek while he laughed that horrid chuckling rattling concatenation of sounds emitted by the organs of speech when reason has been dethroned and the beast has absorbed every other element. The extreme violence of this ravenous laugh brought on a spell of coughing and he lowered me to the floor. He let go one hand, and when in another paroxysm I twisted my other wrist from his grasp, he removed his eye from me and the coughing having passed he closed on me again. All the resources of boxing which I was master of were brought into exercise.

An Artistic Triumph.

The triumph of art over nature is illustrated in the fact that an artist recently made a painting of some beech trees in an old pasture that he sold for $280. The owner of the pasture parted company with his property at about the same time for $150, and called it a good sale at that.

THE TRUE LAXATIVE PRINCIPLE

Why continue the use of remedies that only relieve, when Ely's Cream Balm, pleasant application and a sure cure for Catarrh of the Larynx, can be had.

I had a severe attack of catarrh and was so debilitated I could not bear common conversation. I suffered terribly from itching in my head. I procured a bottle of Ely's Cream Balm, and in three weeks could bear as well as the worst of diseases, catarrh, take Ely's Cream Balm as directed, and in three weeks I was cured. A. E. Newman, Grayling, Mich.

A Variety.

At the banquet given at the opening of the Royal Albert dock in June, 1898, there were 600 waiters, 100 cooks, 4,000 dishes, 24,000 forks and spoons, 12,000 knives, 12,000 glasses and 150,000 plates. The dessert consisted of 500 pounds of grapes and 2,000 baskets of strawberries, in addition to other fruit, and the tables and table cloths extended to a mile and a half.

Strange This.

In Turkey if a man fall asleep in the neighborhood of a poppy field and the wind blow from the field toward him he would become narcotized and who else in the country people, who are well acquainted with the circumstances, did not bring him to a well or stream and empty pitcher after pitcher of water on his face and body.
