"Goodness, me!" exclaimed her brother indignantly. "There is Susan burning shoes again!"

"How very funny!" "You may well say so. I had a most absurd conversation with Susan yesterday on the subject of hoodoo."

"Ridiculous!" "Poor Susan had to pay the wise man $20 for removing that hoodoo, and she never feels any confidence that she will not at any time be assailed by the malicious influence."

"Well, her talk was chiefly of what she called 'sharp luck.' She told me that the best way to fetch it was to take two pins, two nails and two needles and stick them in the ground."

On motion Amos L. Hill was appointed County Superintendent of the Poor for the full term as his own successor.

On motion Murdoch A. Morrison was appointed County Superintendent of the Poor to fill the unexpired term of James B. Wheeler, who has removed from this county.

And they were given for the following persons, viz:

'Time rolled up, and then an important fact came to light. When confronted and exposed recently by parties acting in the role of detectives, A. S. Byers admitted, in the presence and hearing of reliable and good citizens, that on the 22nd of last Sept.—the day on which the "gang" convention met—Capt. Tucker approached him (Byers) and acknowledged that he had wronged him, not at the same time, promise to pay fifty dollars to right the wrong. It may be mentioned that a few days afterwards, Byers and Tucker together signed the report of that "gang" convention, making exceptions only in the cases of those nominees who formally declined their respective nominations.

I herby unqualifiedly assert and deny that I ever said to any man or that Capt. New York, Oct. 18.—Mrs. Mary E. Lease, who has stumped the South with Gen. Weaver, the People's Party candidate for president, telegraphs a morning paper as follows: "The special going the rounds of the press in regard to an interview in which I am reported to have advised the Populists to vote for Harrison, and that a vote for Weaver was a vote for Cleveland, is unqualifiedly false. I would consider it a public calamity for either Harrison or Cleveland to be elected."

A FRAGRANCE
 There was wafted into my room one day
 A delicate odor of new-mown hay,
 A shadow was over my soul the while—
 I had tried to sing it away and smile.
 Beyond the clouds? I had been away
 To the heights of the highest sweet
 —merry hay.
 I believe it fell from an angel's wing
 Who had pity on me, and had sought to bring
 A smile to my face, a joy to my heart,
 And to bid the pain from my soul depart.
 A celestial tear, for the foot had been,
 A gem in her crown the dew of my
 And I was happy the while the day,
 For the fragrant breath of sweet
 —merry hay.

BRIGHTLIGHT.

"Oh! Brightlight, Bright—light!" called Aunt Fannie as she stood in the kitchen, her eyes fixed on the dishpan, from which she had just thrown some water. "Whar in de name or goodness is dat young nigga gone?" She called again, but much louder and with more emphasis. "Brightlight! Oh, Brightlight!"
 "This time she was rewarded with 'Hoo, hoo, mammy,' and a little black specimen of humanity came running breathlessly up to her. 'Whar you bin at yo kant year wen I call you?' she said sharply, scanning his face.
 "'Des bin down in—de—grove—er.'" His hesitation caused her to doubt him, and seizing him by the arm she said threateningly: "Look yer, Brightlight, jackson, don't you dast to tell me any of you lies, for de Lord knows I yoard 'nough of dem fool yo' daddy!"
 "'An't tellin' you no lies, mammy, sho' I an't,'" exclaimed the boy, looking bravely up in her face. "I's bin with M's Edie' in de grove gatherin' ferns."

"If you've bin wid M's Edie' hit's all right, on den agin of you've bin down in de hoes lot posterin' erlong wid dem mules, hit's all wrong. You hear me speak?" "Yes, en."
 She turned to go in the house, but before she reached the door she stopped and seemed to reflect for a moment, then turning to the boy she said severely: "You mind what I done to you 'bout dem mules, kaze of I ever see you ridin' dem again lak' I did yostiddy, I'll alop you down! I say I will!"
 The boy trembled from head to foot and cast a beseeching look toward the grove, as if expecting someone to come to his rescue. "You noen't ter be skeared, I an't going to tuch you; you kin go erlong now and tell M's Edie' how you been disobejn' ya' mammy. Hit'll be mighty curious thing of Satan don't get you 'count of yo' doin'."

Brightlight needed no urging. In a thrice he had cleared the fence and was scampering toward the grove. Aunt Fannie was housekeeper to Judge Johnson and his granddaughter, Edith. She had been in the family ever since she could remember. Her parents had died in the judge's service and were buried in the family graveyard. She could remember the war well, being quite a good sized girl when it broke out. She recollected what an excitement there was among the negroes after the issue of "Lincoln's proclamation." She could shut her eyes and see the scene all over again. How the judge came out on the veranda and called the negroes together. She heard him tell them "they were free and he hoped they would be faithful in their future duties as they had been to him." Some wept and others grinned, but they all left with the exception of her parents, who stoutly refused to take their freedom, preferring to remain with a master who rather than ever kind and indulgent rather than to go into a world they knew so little about. And "Master Frank" the judge's son, how well she remembered him, tall and handsome, with a quick, impulsive temper and decided manner. He was attending a college in the North when the war broke out, and one day the judge received a letter, the contents of which made him turn pale and grasp a chair for support. Fannie's father, who was bodily servant to the judge, brought the letter. When he saw his master's agitation he asked if anything had happened to "Master Frank." The judge took the old servant by the hand and said, with a tremor in his voice: "Tom, you have always been good and faithful and I know you love Master Frank, but henceforth never mention his name in my presence. He is no longer a son of mine; I have just received news that he has enlisted in the union army and is now fighting against his own people."

The judge remained firm, and when the war was over he sent his son word that he never wished to see him again. Years passed, but no tidings came of "Master Frank." If the father was proud so was the son, for a reconciliation was never attempted. One day a stranger came to the big house with a letter for the judge. Aunt Fannie, who was then a young woman, was helping her mother in the cabin when she saw her father come out of the big house and hurry toward them somewhat excited. He told them to get his clothes ready, as he had received news that Master

Frank had died, leaving a daughter, a child of three years, to the care of his father. The judge was absent about a month, and when he returned he brought Edith with him. The judge's wife being dead the sole care of Edith was left to Fannie. "That change had taken place in 'Aunt Fannie's' life since her parents were dead and she had married a worthless fellow who deserted her before the birth of her child. Edith had grown up tall and handsome, with her father's eyes and decided manner.

On the opening of the story he was 7 years old, and being very small for his age he presented a very comical appearance in his little pants and white cotton shirt with bands of cloth brought over the shoulders, crossed in the back and front, serving as suspenders. He fairly worshipped Miss Edith, and she was very gracious, allowing him to accompany her on all her rambles. Sometimes they would be gone all day, returning toward evening loaded down with powers. Brightlight was as fond of flowers as his young mistress, and would search for hours on the hills and in the hollows for his favorites. He had a weakness for the horse lot, where the horses and mules were kept, and his mother had caught him more than once riding around the lot. Whether his mother thought this a dangerous exercise or whether she was in sympathy with the mules would be hard to tell, but at all events he was lectured long and well on the subject. Although she was fond of threatening him and seemed to delight in making him fear her, she was never known to punish him. Edith and Brightlight had started to the grove earlier than usual that morning, and Aunt Fannie, not seeing the boy around, suspected that he had gone to the horse lot to ride the mules. She was quite satisfied when she found he was with Edith, and sent a hasty note to Aunt Fannie, telling her of her vol of her vol and rattling the dishes to keep an accompaniment to her song. When Brightlight got back to the grove he found Edith under a tree sorting ferns and placing them in baskets.

"What did your mother want?" she asked, as the boy seated himself by her side and began to help her. "Oh, she thought I'z down in de hoes lot ridin' de mules." Then looking serious, he continued: "See, M's Edie' an't, 'Cuz when de Satan 'll get me, mammy any's he will." Edith bit her lips to keep from laughing, but when she saw the earnest expression on the child's face she answered: "He won't get you if you are a right good boy. Haven't you been good?"

He made no reply, but seemed to be gazing up at the sky, then, as if an idea had struck him, he said: "Miss Edie', is dey only a white God?"

"A white God? What do you mean?" asked the girl, looking at him in amazement.
 "'I wuz des wonderin' of dar wuz a God'ard de black people, den is only one God for us all. What has you got such ideas in your head?"
 "'I wuz des thinkin' of wen I die I want ter go wher you and Mars Johnson goes."
 "'We will all go to de same place if we are good,'" said Edith, wondering to herself why Brightlight was so serious.

"If you die fo me," cautioned the boy, still gazing at the sky, "you'll be by de side of me, I come erlong, won't you, Miss Edie'?" Kaze I'll be skeered to go in er lone. 'En I dis fus I's goin' ter waite er aut' de big gate for you."

Here he was interrupted by Aunt Fannie calling them to lunch. The next week it rained almost every day and Edith and Brightlight were compelled to postpone their rambles. Brightlight had ventured out during one of the rains and got himself drenched. The result was a severe cold which kept him confined to his bed. Aunt Fannie was not at all alarmed about his illness, as he often complained. She thought when the weather cleared up he would be well again and ready to accompany Edith on her excursions.

Brightlight grew weaker instead of stronger, and Aunt Fannie and Edith became anxious. One afternoon as Edith was sitting by his bedside fanning him he said:
 "'M's Edie', you'reckon dem flowers down by de branch is in bloom?"
 "Yes, Brightlight, I think they are. Would you like some?"
 He nodded his head.
 "She got up and put on her hat, saying: 'Then you shall have some, and I am going after them myself. You just see if I can't bring you some mighty pretty ones.'"

"What you goin' in dis hot sun, honey?" called Aunt Fannie from the kitchen, as she saw Edith walking toward the gate.
 "'I am going down to de branch to get Bright some flowers,'" answered the girl.
 "'M's Edie', you done mak' a fool of dat boy. He'll be gettin' so monstrous proud of we kant stand him wen he gets up."

He nodded his head.
 "Aunt Fannie, he is iller than you think, and it will do him harm to humor him."
 "I am going down to de branch to get Bright some flowers," answered the girl.

 "'M's Edie', you done mak' a fool of dat boy. He'll be gettin' so monstrous proud of we kant stand him wen he gets up."

"You always wuz an angel, so go right erlong on de as you lak'." "How much dat gal is lak' her daddy," she thought, as she watched the proud walk of the girl. "De same as I used to be when I was a boy." An hour passed, but it seemed an age to Brightlight, who seemed from one side of the bed to the other, testing for the footstep he longed to see.
 "I know she's drownded; she done fall in de branch on de drownded," murmured Brightlight as he looked on his pillow. Then he remembered: he had sent her a little black, and she had expected her to bring him flowers—"no wuz she drownded," he sobbed, clutching the pillow in despair. At length he sat up in bed and looked toward the kitchen. He could see his mother through the open door busy at work. He threw the quilts back and got out of bed. He staggered to the chest where his clothes were kept and with trembling hands dressed himself. After casting an anxious glance toward the kitchen, as if he had been noticed he went softly to the door, opened it and stepped out in the yard. He walked slowly in the direction of the branch, stopping now and then to rest. When he reached it he sank to the ground, weak and trembling from exhaustion.

He looked around—no one was in sight. "M's Edie'! O, M's Edie'! Whor is you?" No answer came to him save the rustling of leaves and chirping of birds.
 "She's drownded, by sho'!" he cried piteously, wringing his hands. He was startled by hearing footsteps behind him, and turning his head he saw coming toward him the tall figure of Edith. When the girl saw him she dropped the flowers she held in her hands and uttered a cry: "What brings you here child? What possessed you to leave your bed and come here?"

"I thought you wuz drownded; dat's why I came yer. What makes you stay so long, M's Edie'?"
 "'I could not find de flowers you wanted here and had to go quite a distance to get them,'" she answered, looking down at the little figure before her. How drawn and haggard the little face looked, and how unnaturally bright were the eyes that looked humbly up at her. She saw he was trembling from weakness, and pinning up the flowers she placed them in his hands. Then lifting him up in her strong young arms she bore him to the house. When she placed him on the bed she found he had fainted with the flowers clutched tightly in his hands.
 Aunt Fannie was inconsolable when she realized the danger of his condition and kept wringing her hands and imploring the Lord not to take her only child. Medical aid was summoned, but it was of no use—exposure and excitement had been too much for the frail constitution and the little life was fast slipping away. Once before he died, when Edith bent over him, he whispered faintly: "I'll wuz outside de big gate."—Chicago Herald.

She Was Ready to Take It, But Not Under False Pretences.
 She was from the country, and the country in her case was New Jersey. You would learn the first from the tan on her nose and the second from the mud on her gown. If there had been any room for doubt on either point it would have been removed by her bag. The woman from Jersey, according to the New York World, always carries a bag when she comes to town. She has on a Broadway car and had hidden all the way from Grand street up to Twenty-first. There she signaled the conductor to stop the car. She let it come to a dead standstill before she rose from her seat. She had made a leisurely progress to the door and stopped on the platform—still deliberately. The car was well under way in obedience to the impatient jerk of the conductor's bell before she applied a purse lying where the woman had been seated. He gave the bell a second yank, seized the purse, and with "Just like a woman," he made a break for the platform and halted the woman.

"Here's your purse!" he yelled. "You've gone off and left it."
 She turned, walked unhurriedly to the car, looked hard at the purse and said in a gentle drawl: "Can't take it, if you wish, but it isn't mine."
 The car, with a mad conductor and a load of amused passengers, was starting on its way by a tingle that almost wrecked the bell-ropes. The woman smiled and returned to the sidewalk.

Saved by It.
 Wife—I wish you'd give me a little money, love, as I'd like to get you a present for your birthday.
 Husband—Why don't you make me something yourself, my dear? You know I'd appreciate it all the more.

Won't Wash.
 Stranger (in Baxter street clothing store)—Have you second-hand clothing?
 Cohen (with great pride)—No, my dear sir. I only buy does. Vat I sell is always new.—Texas Sifting.

Even in the Home of Romance.
 The Princess of Sardinia, the favorite daughter of Osman Pasha, the hereditary ruler of the Ottoman Empire, the daughter of Florence, in the midst of the Turkish race who is known to possess the most elegant, though no doubt it is not the most, in the many voluminous and valuable collections of the Princess of Sardinia. She is attractive, with her eyes resembling eyes of the Orient and the fair skin of her European mother. It is not wonderful that she is a person, for she lives in the very home of romance—in a marble palace built in the mysterious circuit of Constantinople, and commands a splendid view of the miraculous patterns of the Golden Horn, and the spot where Europe stretches out an iron hand to Asia across the most wonderful rapids in the world. Gold is the very measure of things that is served to her. At her bidding slaves fly to execute her slightest word. And she knows that in her veins flows the blood of the Ghazis—the bravest of the brave.

Good Night.
 Do you keep Dr. Horsley's Certain Croup Cure in the house? If not, lose no time in purchasing it, for it saves hundreds of parents and anxiety. Croup, whooping cough, bronchitis and quincy are cured and prevented by its prompt use. No return. 50 cents. Druggists can get it of Morrison, Plummer & Co., Chicago, Ill. A. P. Hoxay, Buffalo, N. Y., Manufacturer.

Best Diet for Young Children.
 The best diet for young children is fruit and grains, with a moderate allowance of milk. Such fruits as baked sweet apples, strawberries, peaches, prunes, peaches and grapes can be eaten with impunity, provided that they are eaten at regular meals and not at all sorts of irregular hours, and if good bread and milk be added, nothing more is needed. Indeed, this diet is the best for anyone whose digestion is not strong. These constitute the best and most digestible of the fruits and the ones least likely to disagree with the digestive organs. Children are often made chronic dyspeptics through improper diet before they are ten years old. They are allowed to eat all sorts of indigestible compounds at irregular hours, to say nothing of meats, fats, coarse vegetables, sugar and other sweets, besides drinking tea and coffee. It is no wonder that the Americans are becoming noted as a nation of dyspeptics.

The use of Ely's Cream Balm, a sure cure for Catarrh of the Colon, in its treatment with no pain, inconvenience or dread, which can be said of no other remedy.
 I feel it my duty to say a few words in regard to Ely's Cream Balm, and I do so without solicitation. I have used it half a year, and have found it to be most beneficial. I have suffered from catarrh of the colon ever since I was a little boy, and have been cured by Cream Balm. I have been cured. Many of my acquaintances have used it with excellent results. Dear Doctor, 15 Warren Ave., Chicago, Ill.

LAND OF SUNSHINE.
 A Unique Country Where the Skies are Almost Never Clouded, While the Air is Cool and Bracing. Like Florida in Spring.
 An anomalous Southern resort, by reason of the fact that there one may escape summer heat no less than winter cold. New Mexico is rapidly becoming famous. Averaging forty degrees throughout the entire territory 5,600 feet in altitude above sea-level, and characterized by dry, clear, unobscured air, which, unlike a humid atmosphere, is incapable of communicating heat. The temperature in midsummer remains at a delightfully comfortable degree through the day, and at night becomes invariably brisk and bracing. The sunshine is almost constant, yet the most violent out-of-door exertion may be undertaken without fear of any stressful consequences. Sunstroke or prostration are absolutely unknown there. It is an ideal land for a summer outing. Its climate is prescribed by reputable physicians as a specific for pulmonary complaints, and the medicinal Hot Springs at Las Vegas are noted for their curative value. The most famous hotel in the West, the Montezuma, is located at these springs. Write to John J. Byrne, "The Land No. 1000 Block, Chicago," for an entertaining and profusely illustrated book descriptive of this region, the most picturesque and romantic in the United States.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report

Royal Baking Powder ABSOLUTELY PURE

Many men have their minds already made up to vote for every nominee on the Republican ticket. They will do wisely when they vote for every nominee on that ballot for county offices. The ballot headed by Harrison needs no scratching.

That's human Nature—work, dig and save for a life time to secure a home and property; and have it all swept away by fire in an hour. An Insurance policy often saves a calamity of this kind.

There was a fair attendance at the Democratic meeting last evening. A mixture of Republicans and Democrats, drawn there mostly through the personal popularity of the speaker, Attorney-General Ellis. That gentleman paid considerable attention to financial matters; and used the old arguments to bolster up one or the other of the warring parties to which he belongs—people's and democratic. The Attorney-General is a tip-top good fellow but mighty uncertain in reference to his political bearings.
