REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.
Twenty-Seventh National Encampment G. A. R.

Your Committee on Pensions beg to submit the following Report and Resolutions on the subject of Pensions.

To bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and the reger to speak Lincoln the Great, Lincoln died without a friend, and the Just, standing resolutely, amidst the presence of a cruel and devastating war, that had lasted forty years, the end of which, though so near, his prophetic vision was not able to see, speaking to, for and by the authority of the American people, convened at the hour and the place, when entering for the second time upon the discharge of a trust committed to him by that people.

Within a few short weeks that day so long hoped for and his dying eyes were not privileged to see the full fruition of his labors and the work so well begun and carried on by him fell into other hands, charged with all the trusts that the nation implied and required; and those who had borne the battle, after so many days' turned their backs to the world their long-drawn-out lives.

A great national and individual grief, and the world shrank and lurched around them. These "heavens of the battle" were then, in the main, in the prime and vigor of manhood, with all the honors and possibilities of life before them, with all the hopes born of lofty courage and patriotic and successful achievement beating high in their bosoms; and they little dreamed and still less cared for material aid from the country they had preserved and made free, save where loss of life or limb or impaired health and broken careers rendered them practically helpless and for such aid and for such provision was made by that country.

But as the years passed by, middle life too frequently developed into premature old age, and youth passed into riper years with galloping feet; and alas! too soon the exultant and hearty soldier found that in the race of life there were weights upon his feet and burdens upon his shoulders, as the onset of premature and over-heavy draughts upon his vitality, that sadly interfered with successful competition in the crowd and justice of the fierce straggler for advancement. And still the nation sought for her heroes, and by additional enactment to measurably make provision for the necessities of those who had borne the battle.

A quarter of a century had elapsed. The young had become feeble, and the old had crossed the river. Time with its ruthless fingers, had joined hands with the ravages of war, and the two combined had proved a burden upon the aging soldier greater than he could bear; and they went abroad that in too many instances for the credit, honor or good many of the nation, many of the few survivors of battle, faded in want fallen by the wayside, and in the poor homes, were looking longingly for the relief and comfort of the grave.

Their sympathizing comrades and a patriotic people, with one accord, voiced the sentiment that such was not human administering of the sacred trust recognized and announced by Lincoln. As to what the remedy should be, men's minds differed. Many possibly a majority of the survivors of the war, believed that the time had fully come when the name of every honorably discharged survivor should be placed upon the pension roll, and, we protest, against that they should receive aught that the pension roll, stoutly resisted the demand.

It was under such circumstances and dealing with conflicting opinions, that Congress enacted the disability pension law of June, 1890. This act was accepted by the surviving soldiers as the general law as settlement of the question. Under the administration of that law, the poor—some of his veterans—he who had borne the battle was cared for; and thus the sacred trust accepted and left a legacy to the nation was faithfully administered.

Within a few months we heard, with profound sorrow and grief, that all this must be changed; and that the construction of the law should be changed, and the reger to speak Lincoln the Great, Lincoln died without a friend, and the Just, standing resolutely, amidst the presence of a cruel and devastating war, that had lasted forty years, the end of which, though so near, his prophetic vision was not able to see, speaking to, for and by the authority of the American people, convened at the hour and the place, when entering for the second time upon the discharge of a trust committed to him by that people.

These "heavens of the battle" were then, in the main, in the prime and vigor of manhood, with all the honors and possibilities of life before them, with all the hopes born of lofty courage and patriotic and successful achievement beating high in their bosoms; and they little dreamed and still less cared for material aid from the country they had preserved and made free, save where loss of life or limb or impaired health and broken careers rendered them practically helpless and for such aid and for such provision was made by that country.

But as the years passed by, middle life too frequently developed into premature old age, and youth passed into riper years with galloping feet; and alas! too soon the exultant and hearty soldier found that in the race of life there were weights upon his feet and burdens upon his shoulders, as the onset of premature and over-heavy draughts upon his vitality, that sadly interfered with successful competition in the crowd and justice of the fierce straggler for advancement. And still the nation sought for her heroes, and by additional enactment to measurably make provision for the necessities of those who had borne the battle.

A quarter of a century had elapsed. The young had become feeble, and the old had crossed the river. Time with its ruthless fingers, had joined hands with the ravages of war, and the two combined had proved a burden upon the aging soldier greater than he could bear; and they went abroad that in too many instances for the credit, honor or good many of the nation, many of the few survivors of battle, faded in want fallen by the wayside, and in the poor homes, were looking longingly for the relief and comfort of the grave.

Their sympathizing comrades and a patriotic people, with one accord, voiced the sentiment that such was not human administering of the sacred trust recognized and announced by Lincoln. As to what the remedy should be, men's minds differed. Many possibly a majority of the survivors of the war, believed that the time had fully come when the name of every honorably discharged survivor should of justice as an ex post facto law, and we protest, against that they should receive aught that the pension roll, stoutly resisted the demand.

THEREFORE, The Grand Army of the Republic, in National Encampment assembled, speaking for that great army of beloved comrades, many of them too poor, too bruised, too broken, to withstand the strong arm of the government when administered with an unfeeling hand, proud of the good name and fair fame of the American Volunteer Soldier, interested far beyond any other person or organization that the pension roll shall in truth and in fact be what it is in theory—a "roll of honor," and ever mindful of his cardinal principle, "To preserve honor and purity in public affairs," and denials those indiscriminate charges of universal fraud and fraud that the imputation that became some unworthy survivors may be found, that discredit should be cast upon the entire roll, and this great body of brave and patriotic citizens shall stand disgraced before the land. We demand, that there shall be no backward step in pension legislation or administration; that no pensioner shall be deprived of his property without the procedure of law; that the presumption shall be in favor of honesty and fair dealing; that the poor and lowly shall not be put to unnecessary, expensive or oppressive process to preserve their meagre pensions; that the sacred trust in favor of those who "have borne the battle" shall be sacredly observed and scrupulously administered; and we do now solemnly and deliberately RESOLVE, That the Grand Army of the Republic looks with solicitude, not to solicit, upon the proposition, that after sufficient tribunals have been established by law before which questions have been presented and adjudicated, and every applicant examined and approved upon a general public trust, have arbitrarily deprived, without notice or opportunity to be heard, our needy and distressed comrades of the rights thus solemnly adjudged and confined to them.

WE DECLARE, That every presumption of fraud shall be in favor of the pensioner, and that no change be made in the pensions so accorded until after charges have been made and evidence in support thereof has been produced, of which full charge each pensioner has had full notice and a full and complete opportunity to be heard in support of the pension so accorded to him; and that is further

RESOLVED, That as the Commissioner of Pensions, by his recent withdrawals of the obnoxious rulings which had been so generally condemned, has virtually acknowledged the incorrectness of such rulings, we deem it his further duty to at once restore to the rolls the thousands of pensioners now standing illegally suspended.

Aphorisms—Lacunes—Proverbs.

Every light is not the sun. Never be angry at what you cannot help.

The remedy is often worse than the disease. A genuine repentance founded in love or fear?

If you would excel in arts avoid in study. To him that will ways are seldom wanting.

There is no general rule without exceptions. A good intention unaided is a positive injury.

The business that we love, we go to with delight. Some men are only forgotten while they are alive.

Rest in the bosom of your Father, and your God. A man's true wealth is the good he does in the world.

Can we intentionally offend a person whom we truly love? A well balanced mind will resist the pressure of adversity.

The truly great man is he who does not lose his child heart. Beware of gathering sorrows for this or the future world.

Take it for granted, there can be no excellence, without labor. Light is given to man to use not to flash in somebody else's face.

Blessed is he, that reads and understands what he reads. Men's evil manners live in legends, their virtues in a scroll.

It is a pity that some people never break anything but their records. Truth is what no persons speak when they fall out with each other.

Towards the young things, the valiant never taste of death but once. The rich man is often a stranger to the quiet and content of the poor man.

Victims are, even in our pleasures, but virtue consoles us, even in our pains. What is a more faithful friend or pleasant companion, than a good book?

There is always plenty of malice in the world. The supply is never wanted. True friendship is like sound health; the value of it is seldom known until it is lost.

The humble man, who he receives a wrong, refers revenge to which it doth belong. Kansas City killed more dogs than Chicago last week, but didn't bleed near so many.

Young folks tell what they do, old ones tell what they have done; and fools what they will do. All truths are but the fancies of heavenly loves; and all fancies are the fancies of infernal loves.

Be always on your guard against the advice of the wicked when you come in contact with them. Has anyone actual sin, till he violates the known will of God, and willfully sins against his own conscience?

Many a man wonders why the most prominent citizen in the community is never called upon to manage public affairs. How can the Red men be forgotten, while so many of the States, territories, mountains, rivers and lakes, bear their names.

Never make yourself too little for the sphere of duty; but stretch and expand round to the compass of its objects. Have not angels, as well as autumns, beings once been mortal women, on some of the countless earths of the universe?

The word closure, is really an emphatic way of saying no; we have talked enough about this matter; we must decide it now. Suspicion overtures what confidence builds; and he, who dares but doubts when there's no ground, is neither to himself, or others sound.

Those who would enjoy good eating should keep good nature; an angry man can't tell whether he is eating boiled cabbage or stewed umbrellas. Every good act is charity. Giving water to the thirsty is charity. Putting the wanderer in the right path is charity. A pleasant look is charity.

What places are a terror to those many of the so-called titans, in their present degradation, to teach the theory and practice of fashionable iniquity? There are perhaps, some, a certain few people who will remember the fair with feelings who had seen men and way, there was a complaint there the other day—and took a whirl first thing, thanks to the Ferris Wheel.

Since discipline of character can be acquired by discipline, what is the best method to acquire it? The firm resolve to obtain that knowledge, necessary for a choice, and then to do what we know to be right, at any and every peril.

Has whose heart is pure and good, who is without pride, who loves every soul as his own, who believes uniformity to be a choice, and then to do what we know to be right, at any and every peril.

Highest of all in Leavening Power.—Latest U. S. Gov't Report.

Oh how poor seems the rich gift of genius, when like the adroit rascal, that hath out-flow his strength upon the sea, ambition—wrecked—a thing the thrush might pity, as she sits brooding in quiet, on her lowly nest.

One, man perhaps, proves miserable in the study of the law, who might have flourished in that of physics or divinity; another nuns his head against the pulpit, who might have been servicable to his country in a third; and a third, perhaps, every dull man who sets as his mother, she is a cheery little party, and so she goes about with a step as light and glad, some when on an errand of mercy as if shod with a pair of fairy slippers and tripping on a well waxed floor.

The girl who all love is frankly girlish, with an old fashioned sentiment, charmingly developed, who recognizes her duty as daughter toward the woman who sets as her mother. She is a cheery little party, and so she goes about with a step as light and glad, some when on an errand of mercy as if shod with a pair of fairy slippers and tripping on a well waxed floor.
