DISASTERS LAID TO WIRELESS

Possible Explanation of Events That Have Been More or Less of a Mystery,

A well-known scientist receasily sug-gested that the mysterions explosion-which destroyed the british battleship, the Bulwark, might have been due to the influence of wireless waves. The theory that wireless causes explosions was put forward some time age by a Freach engineer. To prove his point, the called attention to the fact that the disaster to the British steamer, the Volterno, which was burst in the At-lantis, took place just on the junction point where the wireless waves from the Elffel tower and Glace bay meet. The mysterious mine explosion—at Sengienydd also occurred on the Clif-den-Parls wireless line.

Senginenydd also occurred on the Clif-den-Paris wireless line.

The French engineer also points on that in his opinion wireless has a strange offect on the mind, and he con-siders that it is for this reason that collisions between ships have greatly increased or recent years. Many of these mishaps have taken place at the junction of wireless war rounce, and it is said that the wireless was offected the brains of ships commanders that the brains of ships' commanders that in critical moments they lost control of their vessels. This theory is con-firmed by the fact that birds flying near wireless stations move in an un-
