EVILS OF INDIVIDUALISM BROUGHT ON REGULATIONS, SPEAKER STATES

That government regulation of private industry, as essential under the national recovery act, became necessary when unfettered individualism created hardship and economic dislocation for the mass of people after the development of large corporations, was the contention of Russell H. Wilson, principal of Manistique high school, in discussing "America's Changing Political Philosophy" before the members of the Manistique Woman's club Tuesday afternoon.
Declaring that the control of private business by government in the interest of the public welfare is today one of the nation's most pressing problems, Mr. Wilson traced the growth of economic thought from the days of the feudal lord barons and the city craft guilds to the modern N.I.A. He pointed out how the invention of labor-saving machinery and the development of the trusts broke down the control of the old world guilds and ended the days of feudalism and created the era of extreme individualism known as "laissez faire." He explained how the "let alone" policy of "laissez faire" was an inevitable step in the development of economic thought and how it covered the ground during the days of small business establishments. He referred to the first weaknesses, which became noticeable after the advent of the trusts, such as price and how, after violent abuses, began to be better served by the government to pass regulating measures to prevent unbridled exploitation of public rights.
In discussing the era of rugged individualism, which prevailed when the United States was founded as a free nation, he referred to the abuses which developed in the last century, such as child labor, cut-throat competition, monopolies and other private practices where the greed for gain instead of better serving the general public, as the "laissez faire" people said it would, resulted in the crowding out of the weak and the bettering of the strong. The charging of higher prices where there was no competition, and the degradation of labor.
He pointed to the development of government control of industry, which formed the latter part of the nineteenth century, resulting in the passage of the Sherman anti-trust act, the Clayton anti-trust act, and the Federal Trade Commission act, all designed to break up the monopolistic corporations and to protect the general public from exploitation.
"The active period of trust organization closed about 1920," he told the members of the Woman's club. "By that time the individualists were rapidly developing another type of organization known as the trade association. They arose because cut-throat competition by a few irresponsible firms in each industry threatened to destroy manufacturers who attempted to pay fair wages and in return get a fair price for their products. The associations provided a medium for the exchange of such business information as was deemed necessary to stabilize the industry. Presently, they sought to establish uniform prices. The Supreme Court, in the American Handwork Manufacturers Association case in 1921, apparently prohibited the association, when it dissolved the association, holding that concerted action is prohibited when the necessary tendency is to destroy the kind of competition in which the public has long looked for protection. One of our local industries, the Brown Dimension company, belonged to the Maple Flooring association, which was dissolved under the anti-trust laws. The Supreme Court refused to dissolve the association because it could find no evidence that its information service was so vast as to regulate prices. The trade association made clear the situation which confronted business."
This brings us to the latest governmental policy, the N. R. A. The government was eager to establish road wages, shorter hours, and better conditions in industry. It therefore asked the trade associations to form codes of fair competition including adequate provisions to give labor better wages, and at the same time permitted the associations virtually to fix prices high enough to cover the increased costs of production. Thus the trade associations are permitted to do what was previously forbidden, and our local Brown Dimension company finds itself permitted to do what it could not do in 1921. A vital difference between the present codes and the old trade association idea is that under the new codes the government is an interested party and protects the public interest by preventing prices being fixed too high or wages too low."
Mr. Wilson also pointed out how untrammeled individualism had produced tragic results in the world of high finance where unscrupulous investment bankers and speculators have been able to fleece the public without straying beyond the letter of the law. He told how unscrupulous had been unscrupulous on the public through holding company promoters and investment bankers, the latter denning up millions in profits while the public was left "holding the bag" when the depression struck. "The new Federal Securities Act marks a definite step on the part of the federal government to protect the investor," Mr. Wilson declared.
Mr. Wilson concluded his instructive address by declaring that we must face the present economic problem early and courageously. "It will not do to attempt to solve it by the incantation of phrases on the one hand, or to quote the results that were expected of it. The solution of our problem lies somewhere between the extreme individualism of laissez faire, on the one hand, and extreme socialism on the other. Just where the balance will be struck is for the American people to decide."

Hunters Boost Ferry Business

Reports of hunting season traffic on the Michigan ferries at the Straits of Mackinac were given out November 18 by the state highway department. Between November 10 and November 14, which is the rush season before the opening carried 5,302 vehicles. In the same period in 1932, 4,218 were carried. The 1933 total represents an increase of nearly 1,000 vehicles over 1932. This traffic was distributed:
November 10, 1933..... 803
November 11, 1933..... 780
November 12, 1933..... 1,158
November 13, 1933..... 1,609
November 14, 1933..... 852
Day and night service, with all two and one-half hours for a round trip, including passage both ways, loading and unloading, and cars were transported on an average of one every 48 seconds.
The traffic fell off to a straggling flow on November 15, and one of the ships was taken off with the remaining two running on 25-hour schedule.
Early return of many of the hunters is indicated by the ferry reports due to heavy snow on the main highways. New men arrived recently to spend six months as part of the personnel of Camp Manistique.

Lake Changes In Schoolcraft County

Removal of 11 Michigan inland lakes from the list of so-called "pike lakes" in which general fishing is permitted May 1, and the addition of five other lakes to the list, was approved by the conservation commission at its regular November meeting, it was learned here Tuesday. The department also added nine lakes to the list of "trout lakes" and removed two lakes from that designation.
Among the lakes removed from the list of "pike lakes" is Boonville Lake in Schoolcraft county. Lakes added to the list of "trout lakes" include Clear Lake in Schoolcraft county.

Camp Manistique Moved Wednesday

Camp Manistique, which has been located since organization at "The Pines," a few miles east of Manistique, was moved Wednesday last week to the new winter quarters about 12 miles north of Manistique, off M-94.
Eighty-eight new men arrived recently to spend six months as part of the personnel of Camp Manistique.

Over three centuries ago a little band of English pilgrims on the bleak coast of New England celebrated the First Thanksgiving, offering thanks to the Almighty for their survival and safe deliverance from the terrible hardships of that first year on the soil of the New World.

Looking back over the years, and the progress of civilization from that distant day, it is hard to picture the position of that courageous little group. Thousands of miles from home with a yawning ocean stretching between, surrounded by uncharted forests where white man had never trod, denied the comforts and convenience of settled country, they yet found reason for expressing their appreciation, if only for life itself.
Next week the anniversary of the first Thanksgiving will be celebrated throughout the United States.
No person who compares his position, no matter how unfavorable, with the position of those hardy pioneers of Plymouth, will fail to find reason to be thankful this Thanksgiving.
After four years of depression, the sun is starting to shine again through the clouds. A courageous President sits in the chief executive chair of the United States. Daring measures have been started to relieve unemployment, to start industrial wheels turning and to bring comfort again to millions of citizens. A gigantic program of public works has been started, reaching down into every city, village and hamlet. The tide has turned, and although our climb upward may be slow and painful, it should be sure and steady.
Yes, if we carefully analyze every effort made to end the depression, if we compare employment records with a year, or two years ago, we will find reason to be thankful.
And we should add to our thankfulness a resolve to do all in our power to aid the recovery program.

We have Reason to be Thankful

Happenings that Affect the Dinner Pails, Divided Checks and Briefly stated, the Swope plan proposes the setting up of an organization very similar to the NRA with this essential difference—control would be in the hands of boards of business men instead of government officials. Not pleased by it at all were labor leaders who doubted that the boards of big corporation executives would protect workers.

President Roosevelt said of the Swope proposal that the present time is not propitious for a change in plans—that "the next few months are expected to bring forth hundreds of other plans."

As a result, the average citizen is in the credit of the government issuing them. Real money is seldom seen—it is gold and is jealously hoarded by treasuries.

Need For Weight Tax Cut Is Shown

The need for a reduction in price of automobile license plates is shown by the decrease in motor vehicle weight taxes and gasoline taxes collected by the department of state in 1933.

For the first nine months of 1933 the total gasoline tax amounted to $18,122,867. This is a decrease of $1,817,512 under the amount collected during the same period in 1932.

The motor vehicle weight tax for the first six months of 1933 was $17,532,417 or $1,149,192 less than was collected for the first six months of 1932.

Department records show that on Nov. 3, 1933 there were 58,416 fewer motor vehicles operating on Michigan highways than there were a year ago. Secretary of State Frank D. Fitzgerald has recommended that the legislature reduce license plate costs to three, six and nine dollars. This reduction, he declares, would permit thousands of motorists, who cannot afford to pay the present weight tax, to use their automobiles.
