PERFORATED WITH BULLET.

Patrick Cassidy, of Gould City, was shot by his wife. He is at the Manistique Hospital.

On Friday morning last Patrick Cassidy, of Gould City, went to the home of John Dalby, some ten miles from Gould City, and there had an altercation with his wife, Jennie Cassidy, who with a 32 cal. revolver shot him five times. Cassidy and his wife never lived happily together and they separated and a short time since made a division of their property, applying for a divorce.

Cassidy was brought to this city Friday night and has since been at the Manistique hospital under the care of Dr. Patterson. The bullet wounds were dressed and since the injured man has improved and now it is thought he may pull through.

One of the bullets entered the left breast an inch and a half above the heart, three struck him in the face and neck and one in the arm.

The woman was arrested and taken to the Justice Healy, who bound her over for trial in the next court. Mrs. Cassidy's story as given at the preliminary examination is about as follows: Cassidy went to the home of Dalby, where she had been stopping and started to lock up her room, she called him away, when he reached her door, then she fired into him seven or eight times and he began to shriek. She then went to another room and returned with a revolver and at short range shot at him six times, five of the bullets taking effect. Frank H. Peters of this city will defend the prisoner. The claim will be set up that the shooting was in self defence.

Michigan a Summer Resort State
An official Directory, showing briefly but strikingly the advantages of the numerous summer and health resorts, the mineral springs and the excellent sanitarium in Michigan, is soon to be distributed by the State Board of Health.

In accordance with a resolution of the legislature, the Board has caused to be made a thorough inquiry into the subject of Michigan's resorts, and has collected information that will be of great interest and value to future tourists to this state, including increasing numbers of persons resident in other States who in every hot summer seek healthful and pleasant surroundings further north.

Lake State's immense resort capacity in a very favorable light. Beginning at the southeastern corner of the State, making Detroit the initial point, in a series of short descriptive articles, the text of the pamphlet follows the lake shore up to Mackinac Island, treats of the Upper Peninsula, and then deals with the resorts on the Lake Michigan shore, following southward to the southeastern corner of the State.

The inland resorts are next taken up from the northern springs and then the sanitarium. The pretty Indian legends and traditional history of each locality has been briefly and interestingly chronicled, the information is accurate, timely and impartially stated, and facts presented in such a readable manner as to make the work worthy of great commendation.

Among the prominent features of the directory are the numerous pictures of beautiful localities, pretty or historic spots, marine views, and many of the beautiful places so plentiful in this State, making an attractive and very interesting publication. Before the next hot season, the "Directory" will be distributed among Sanitariums and prominent public health men throughout the United States and neighboring provinces, authorities, in their several States and provinces, in conditions of healthful existence, also to public libraries, and wherever it is likely to do the most good in spreading Michigan's fame as a health resort abroad in the land.

The typographical work on this "summer-resort Directory" is commendable and altogether, the State Board of Health is to be congratulated upon such a satisfactory effort to place Michigan at the head of states as a desirable health and summer resorts.

A limited number of copies can be had by citizens of Michigan interested in the subject, by sending the stamp with which to prepay the postage, which is six cents on each copy.

THE MARRIAGE BELLS

The handle turned, as the door slowly opened a man who had been sitting by the fire rose to his feet. It was not the woman he had expected, but, oddly enough, the very individual whose personality his mind had been dwelling on.

"I was thinking of you," was his opening remark, as he bent to kiss her hand. The hand was withdrawn, under the circumstances the act was not surprising. It motioned him to a seat. He sat down, negligently crossing his legs, with his right leg.

"Thinking of me—and expecting my sister," she replied, archly.

"The very essence of combination," he replied, politely.

"So you are going to be married?" She started abruptly.

"At last," he replied, incautiously.

"The experiment might have been tested before had you elected." The interest in her speech made her color.

"The natural attitude of a woman is unbecomingly exaggerated." He attempted an evasion.

"You know I have not exaggerated," said she, quite firmly.

"If it were possible, I wish you had," his voice was low.

"Who is to blame?" She turned away. It was almost a whisper.

"God knows I thought you had married."

"There was no occasion to think. If God knew, St. James' would have known."

"It was reported in St. James' you had married abroad."

"You believed," she asked, scornfully.

"The man loved an assent."

"How consoled some men are," the woman exclaimed, quickly.

"That is woefully true, dear lady," said he, quite pleasantly.

"Was it from pride or love?" demanded she, quickly.

"I sincerely hoped it was not from love," observed the man.

"She made a gesture of intense resentment. "How can you say such things to me?"

"To whom else should I say them?" The turn of affairs was becoming complex.

"You are to marry my sister?"

"That is also quite true."

"You flitted me—"

"Which is not true at all."

"You know that you did."

"You should know that I did not."

She turned her back to look out of the window. Her toe tapped restlessly on the carpet.

"The marriage of which—"

"It is an error of taste to quibble," said she.

"It was certainly no quibble, but I beg to explain to you."

"The whole season you acted as my devoted slave."

"To be your slave for a season is to be your slave for a lifetime," interrupted the man.

"You evidently possess many lives," she retorted, tartly.

"If I did, I would lay them at your feet," was his calm response.

"Where so many others have trodden, I really should decline." She spoke dispassionately. "If I loved you then, which I certainly did not—your con-

"I am thinking of two years ago." His voice was hard.

"What a cad you are," said she, placing the pin in her dress.

"I beg your pardon," said the man, humbly.

"She looked at him, and her eyes were tender as they lingered on the face of the man. She held the pin in her fingers again.

"This bond—" commenced she, looking at the pin.

"Can there be a bond between us?" asked the man, eagerly.

"You make me weak. It is not possible. Yet I love you. Why were not you true, love?" Her eyes flashed.

"But I was, I am. This marriage is a criterion," said the woman, quietly.

"It is nothing." The man rose to his feet.

"The idiosyncrasies of nature can be tangible enough."

"What a tragedy my life will be," declared the man, bitterly.

"By looking into your future you omit my past," the girl rejoined.

"I believe some lives re-enact the deeds of the past in the actions of the future."

"What an awful comfort. It will blight my happiness."

"My happiness." My happiness—"and he named." The rest of a woman could be heard on the staircase. It stopped at the door.

"Here comes my happiness," said he, gratefully.

"Be courageous," said the woman, as her sister entered.

"There goes my happiness," said he to himself, as the former woman left the room.

At the door she turned, and her eyes met. The lips of the man met the lips of the woman in his arms, but his heart had already met the heart of the woman by the door.

Georgia Razor-Backs.

I will make some jottings from my experience as a swine breeder in the north, for the benefit of my brother breeders in the east and west, writes Geo. M. Prescott in Western Swineherd. My father was a slave holder and southern planter; a breeder of razor-back hogs of all the different breeds—red, yellow, white spotted and red and black. He raised many hogs and fed them liberally to his slaves. When only seven years old I fell in love with a little blue sow owned by a wealthy Georgia planter. I asked him to give me the sow. To my joy he smilingly replied, "Well, Georgia, you shall have her." I carried her to my father's house and soon found that my father was in love with the little blue sow. From her he received blood which greatly improved his Georgia razor-backs. This incident occurred just fifty years ago, and I have pursued the calling with pleasure and profit from that day to this. Your readers will understand that there is quite a difference between a hog-raiser and a breeder. My operations for many years were confined to native breeds or razor-backs, but I found that this gave me no responsive. Development was slow and tedious. I could get nothing to come up to my ideals and I abandoned the task, believing I had to be susceptible to no satisfaction. The rule of a woman's best I can say for any specimen of razor-back is that it is better than no hog. Like his wire-gate owner, he has no past nor future, but he is satisfied by chance and ill, for the present, the spare he happens to fall into when removed from the womb of fortality. You have heard something of late of this hog's good qualities—his constitution, his power to resist disease and his ability to secure his own food, etc. Now, any one who is familiar with the breed knows that he is not constituted or bred for a constitution. He has no good, solid back, no heart, no roony sides to promote digestion, is as slow to recover from disease as he is woefully deficient on the contrary if there is disease near or far his roving disposition leads him to forget it out. He cuts up as he holds on. Any hog will secure his food if it is convenient. No honest man wants a hog that will secure his food and disfigure his fields, by breaking into his neighbors' fields. If I should exhibit a specimen before competent judges the verdict would be the best for my use. I believe this hog to be the best for the south, though no blooded hog can be kept in his normal size in the south. With proper care, pasture and feed, however, he will be profitable and large enough, though not so large as the native section. If I had space I could explain, but it is well that it is so. I think we ought to be satisfied with our portion and let our western brothers and us raise large hogs and have a good living when they earn it. I would not, if I could, raise all the cotton and large hogs and leave my brothers destitute. I rejoice in their success and I mean my fate. Blooded stock not appreciated and cotton five cents.

MRS. PINKHAM'S WARNING TO WOMEN.

Neglect is the Forerunner of Misery and Suffering—A Grateful Household Writes of His Wife's Recovery.

Nearly all the ill health of women is traceable to some derangement of the feminine organs. These derangements do not cure themselves, and neglect of the occasions resulting from them is only putting off trouble.

Patience's stories are constantly coming to Mrs. Pinkham of women whose neglect has resulted in serious heart trouble and a whole train of woes.

Here is the story of a woman who was helped by Mrs. Pinkham after other treatment failed:

DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—It affords me very great pleasure to be able to state that I believe my wife owes her health to your medicine and good advice. For three years her health failed rapidly; she had heart trouble, often falling down in dizzy and fainting spells, shortness of breath, choking and smothering spells, bloating of the stomach, a dry cough, dyspeptic symptoms, menses irregular, scanty, and of an unnatural color. She had been treated by physicians with but little benefit. She has taken your treatment according to your directions, and is better in every way. I am well pleased with the result of your treatment, and give you permission to use my letter for the benefit of others.

CHAS. H. and Mrs. MAY BURCHEN, Fort Meyer, Va.

The healing and strengthening power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for all female ills is so well established that it needs no argument. For over twenty years it has been used by women with results that are truly wonderful. Mrs. Pinkham invites all women who are puzzled about their health to write to her at Lynn, Mass., for advice. All such correspondence is seen by women only, and no charge is made.

ANDERSON AT ANDOVER.

An Able Attempt at Alliteration Any how.

Augustus Anderson's Aunt Abbie anxiously awaited Augustus's arrival at Andover. Aunt Abbie anxiously asked Augustus, and Augustus always congratulated, and autumn after autumn arrived at Andover, as arranged. Augustus arrived and anxiously asked Aunt Abbie about apples. Aunt Abbie answered, "Aye, Augustus, apples are abundant." Augustus ate an apple, and Aunt Abbie asked Augustus's assistance about arranging a new house. Augustus assisted Aunt Abbie about anything asked, and Aunt Abbie always appreciated Augustus's amiable acts. Aunt Abbie's agents anxiously attended Augustus's needs, and Augustus always appreciated Augustus's amiable acts. Augustus's agents anxiously attended Augustus's needs, and Augustus always appreciated Augustus's amiable acts.

Gray's Book in Dakota.

Mr. E. H. Hinkley of Marcus, Iowa, the able editor of the Fruitman, says: "While in the Black Hills recently the editor was informed that the Gipsy Moth has appeared there. A Mr. McKirahan of Rockford was out in the forests last summer in company with an entomologist connected with the Lincoln University. The Lincoln gentleman discovered and identified the Gipsy Moth. Patches of dead timber are now pointed out as proof of its ravages. If this conclusion is correct there is reason for the apprehension that the Dakota forests are doomed. The matter is so important that it seems to demand thorough expert investigation at once."

A Hard Fate.

"It's hard to tell just what to do," said the man who was sitting on the back porch in his shirt sleeves. "Yet one ought to get a start with an 'h' bright prospect opening up all over the world," remarked the next-door neighbor, who was mending a hole in the fence. "Yes, but supposing I had gone to the Klondike? 'D be so far away now that I couldn't go and help develop Cuba. And if I go to Cuba I'll miss a chance to go when the next rich territory opens up. There's no use of trying to deny it. This is a hard life."

And thus he tilted his chair back against the wall and went to sleep—Washington Star.

His Kid Nephew.

A colloquy of mine tells me a story of a Scotch newspaper with which he was connected. A local celebrity was dying by inches. His biography was being written, and in the early hours of the morning a printer deviled used to be sent across to ask for the dying man, so that the obituary might be thoroughly up to date. Morning after morning the boy, who had the landlady's name, was called to the landlady's door at having to make the fruitless journey. At last one morning he got desperate. "Is that man nearly dead?" he asked. "The paper's ruin to press and we canna' wait any longer."—London Sketch.

Dangerous Experiment.

It is a dangerous experiment for men to reject Christ in this world with the hope of having a second chance after death. The way of salvation has been made plain and simple, and God is calling to men to repent of their sins and accept Jesus Christ as their savior.—Rev. P. C. Cronick.
