CHAPTER XVII.—(Continued.)
 "Marguerite, my darling, my darling, you forgive me! Think what I do for you! I am parting—you and that means death! Won't you forgive me?"
 "Yes, I will! I forgive you," she responded tremulously. "Heaven forbid I should be hard-hearted to you. Indeed, I'm glad to forgive." "Then," he said, "give me your hand." "I gave it and he pressed it to his lips." "Good-by, beloved," he said, touching her forehead with a reverence as if he had been the hand of the dead. But he looked to ask her the question—"you going back to London?" "You have hired a fly to take you to the station?" "No." "You can never walk to it." "I can't go very close to her." "You must let me help you." "No, oh, no!" "Then I shall not believe that I am forgiven. Let me take you to the village. I know where to get a fly there, and I will see you safe into the train. You cannot deny me that; you will not look a word to vex you; but oh, my darling, let me do this for you! Don't refuse me." "Yes," she answered, "you may take me. I feel very strange and weak. I don't think I could walk. Will you please take care of me?" She took a few steps forward, but the dirt to avoid made her turn deadly pale. She had been through too much today. Valdaue saw the change in her face, and started forward. The next moment she was lying senseless in his arms.

CHAPTER XVIII.
 Lady Mildred went down stairs into the drawing room that night, a tumult of feelings contending in her heart.

With his hands behind him Valdaue sauntered up and down.
 All day Valdaue absented himself, and she could not understand it. It must be jealousy, of course—that was clear; but it was possible that she had gone too far, and alienated where she had meant to interest. She searched round the room at she entered search of him. He was not there. Fact just turned the scale against him.
 Lady Mildred was not going to entertain even the suspicion of being deceived.
 "That settles the matter," she said to herself. "Bernard Selwyn said he would be to-night, and I will accept him."
 Later in the evening Lord Unfranklin brought her a telegram from the doctor.
 "Called to town on business—very sorry. Please make my apologies. Will return tomorrow if I may."
 His lordship would have held that telegram with more emotion had he known that it secured twenty thousand a year to the Unfranklin estates. Late that night Bernard dejectedly sat at the open window of his bedroom. He had broken faith with the girl who loved and trusted him. He had deceived and was now engaged to Lady Mildred. The mad triumph of his hour was over; in the darkness and stillness his conduct looked very bad. Not only was he bitterly ashamed, but he was alarmed. What were the consequences of this? Should Lady Mildred once discover that, at the time of his proposal to her, he was in honor bound to another woman—well, his imagination might be vivid enough to picture the scene. He really believed himself to be in honor bound. Difference in rank had weighed very little; but for the moment she averted his emotions compelling her to do so. He only felt now that, with Lady Mildred for his wife, he might fulfill all the golden dreams which he had formed since his sudden acquisition to wealth.
 Marguerite would not have been happy with him, that it was true; kindness to confess this before marriage which his heart was no longer contented. Besides he was no longer contented. He had been engaged to Marguerite—she always said so. Had not her last words to him been, "I am not, in return, held here to his heart and vowed that he was her slave? It was a humiliating position, and he wished under it, but determined to put off the evil day of confession.
 While Bernard was thinking thus at Clarisade, Martineau the irremissible, Martineau the heartless, for whose safety his own was suffering all the pangs of jealousy, was pacing the dreary length of a street in East London.
 It was a very warm night—the atmosphere in that crowded district was almost stifling. Now and then screaming and discordant laughter broke the silence, as various denizens of the neighborhood roared home to their beds after the night's carousal.
 With his hands behind him, Valdaue sauntered up and down, heedless of these interruptions. His face was very pale; he had no sign to console him in his solitude. He seemed like one who neither knew nor cared whether he went, only his sunken eyes were fixed upon an upper window of the doctor's house—a window where a light was burning. To and fro he walked, while still the rattle burned steadily on through the night. He knew that in that bedroom the woman who owned all his heart was suffering the cruellest agony, and that he was the cause of it, and he could not help her in any way—could not mitigate heart yearned towards him passionately. Her accepted lover had a hard time of it that day. The guests remarked to one another that, if Bernard was "sweet" on his cousin, he put a very good face on it. He was filled with quiet ease for he, did not attend to her in the least, and offered his congratulations without any evidence of emotion.

 Some three days after this, Valdaue took him back to London at once. A week later Marguerite received the following letter:
 "Dear Miss Lilbourne—I have to announce to you that your uncle, Mr. Daniel Brandon, died suddenly of apoplexy in Paris last week. There is no will, and by the nature of the entail, all his landed estates and house property revert to you, as the only living blood relation. His affairs, I am sorry to say, are in great disorder, and quite half your fortune has been gambled away on the stock exchange. There will be, I hope, between six and seven hundred a year for you when all his claims are settled. I have seen his solicitors, and can easily prove his identity, as Cathie recognized you at that day you fainted at High Lane, and we have Mrs. Auld as well as her trust. If your young wife is of the personality, but I am afraid there will be next to nothing for her; she could not make some slight provision for her. Mr. Brandon's solicitor will call upon you tomorrow, as I imagine that it will not be pleasant for you to see me. The money which I owe you has been placed to your account at the bank. I am afraid that the annulling of the marriage will be a more painful business; but it shall be done in the most discreet manner possible. The one thing I left for me to wish for is that, after so many years of sorrow, happiness may come to you in unaltered measure, so that in years to come you may look back upon me and the injury I did you as nothing, but the nightmare which you said it seemed the first day you came to see me in Lancashire. I shall go abroad when all this is settled, and shall try to cross your path no more. I can never forget your noble forgiveness—no one comfort I shall carry with me through my lonely life. With deepest respect I am most truly yours,
 "Valdaue Martineau."
 Some days afterwards he received a note from Mary Stelling, inclosing a slip of paper, the words on which were written in pencil:
 "Dear Sir I send you a line from Miss Lilbourne; she is not well enough to attend to business at all just now. She has a low nervous fever, my father thinks it is because she refused to leave London this autumn. Now that money is no object, we hope to take her to the Riviera for a winter. Thanking you for all the trouble you have taken on her behalf, I am, yours faithfully,
 "Mary Stelling."
 The slip of paper inclosed, which Valdaue carried reverently by his life, before opening, contained only a few words:
 "I am not at all well—I cannot attend to anything. Kindly have the question of the marriage until you have heard again from
 "Marguerite."

WHY SOME PEOPLE ARE BLACK
 It is claimed that wearing of cloths affects the complexion.
 Why are some races on this earth darker-skinned than others? It is an altogether due to the heat of the sun's rays, for many people of tropical climes are as light-skinned as Europeans. It has long been known that climate alone is not sufficient to account for a colored people. Dark skins are by no means confined to the tropics; they are to be found in races even beyond the temperate zone. This diversity, according to a writer in one of the American magazines, can only be accounted for by considering the different modes of life that have acted for centuries upon the various classes and castes of the world. The color which works in the fields with a strip of cotton cloth about his loins, is very dark; the merchant and trader who never goes abroad without being thoroughly clothed are many degrees fairer.
 It is said that a colony of Jews on the west coast of India has been established for nearly eighteen centuries, but because they have not followed the habits of the people as regards clothing they remain to this day a white people. On the other hand, the Aryan populations of India and Persia, originally a fair people, by adopting the customs of those countries have come in a great measure a colored race.
 Accordingly, it is argued that the steady march of nature has made the evolution of a fair people, but into the world. The layer of dark pigment beneath the cuticle prevents the skin from blistering, and when proper clothing renders this safeguard unnecessary, nature dispenses with altogether. It is also hinted that color has something to do with the mental and intellectual condition of a people, but into these questions the writer wisely forbears to enter.
 Killarney to Be Annexed.
 It is cheerful to hear that perhaps we are to have the estates of Killarney, the Lakes of Killarney, Ireland, in addition to our other American possessions, as a new manufacture of Lonsdale, N. Y., having purchased the territory. Of course there is a possibility that Mr. Peck and his money will himself be annexed to Ireland instead, but we hope that he will spend his wife in this country, and spend his time issuing free tickets for the ensuing summer to his fellow Americans, for the Killarney of the famous epic is a beautiful region.

ORIGIN OF THE TERM CADDIE
 Ingenious Explanation of Common Golf Term by Frank Boyd.
 To some of the unnumbered and innumerable host of golfers the question may have occurred at one time or another—Whence came the word "caddie"? Frank Boyd, in his "Omitted Chapters in the History of Montpelier," which he contributes to the Book of Montpelier Golf Links Bazaar, offers an ingenious as well as highly amusing explanation of the term. "There was, he says, a Cudeo, or 'Kelede,' establishment at Montpelier, and in the woods of Arbroath disposed the Cudeos of their lands and made them their servants. One day it occurred to a monk, while having a game of golf, to make the Kelede carry his clubs. He found this contributed greatly to his comfort. "The plan was adopted by the rest of the monks, and henceforth they were sent out without being accompanied by their Kelede. Now you know," continues Mr. Boyd, "that in these parts the practice is to cut short in the middle of the letter 'C' in a name. For instance, never says 'Halger,' it is always 'Halgie.' Thus it was natural that in the course of time 'C' should drop out of the Kelede, and it should come to sound like 'cayde,' and to this day this is how the word is pronounced by superlative Scotch youths, in the lower portions of the country. It was, however, branched out to 'caddie' as a matter of fact, the origin of the term 'caddie' does not appear to be the Kelede, but the name of a Janissary, who carried caddie as one who earns a livelihood by running errands, delivering messages, and so on. The word 'caddie' was originally the same with the French cadet, which, as he remarks, is sometimes used to denote a young person in general. The name of the word, however, holds the same view, but the word came to be employed to denote the lad who carries a player's golf clubs, he will be elucidated."
 "Literature."
 Lousy Pigs.
 Many farmers sometimes wonder what is the matter with their pigs when there is nothing the matter except they are lousy. Waller's Farmer says they are not accustomed to looking for lice except on the other legs, and pigs frequently are so badly infested that the complaint irritates from day to day brings on indigestion, diarrhoea and other symptoms of cholera. We know of a number of cases last spring where pigs were supposed to have the cholera, and were entirely recovered by the application of the well known and efficient remedy for lice. If you can do nothing else but a barrel two-thirds full of water pour a gallon or two of kerosene on top of it, take your pig by the ear and submerge him in it and put him in a clean place where he can not pick up a new infestation from the pens and bedding. A better remedy is to mix a little kerosene emulsion according to the recipe we have frequently published and apply it to the whole herd. No matter how much of a miserable lice. The annual losses from lice, cattle, horse, hogs, chickens and sheep ticks on the average farm would pay the taxes. Why not save this?

America's Yellow Ponty.
 It is an odd fact that the great American poultry-consuming public is greatly prejudiced in favor of the yellow-legged, yellow-fleshed fowl. That it is merely a matter of fashion, or of prejudice, is amply proved by the fact that in all other countries the preference is given to the white-necked birds. France is recognized as authority upon this point, and it is noted that the devoted to the use of man and in that sunny land the Houdan stands pre-eminence. They have been bred for generations for the express purpose of acting as a table delicacy. They are a bird of medium weight and large breast prominence; being small bodied and fine finished, with a small amount of fat, they are a profitable carcass for the consumer to purchase. In the great Paris markets huge piles of dressed Houdans and La Picotte fowls can be seen at the numerous stalls. These are reared in small flocks by the villagers adjacent to the city, and sold for a profit to dealers who make the daily or weekly tours—inland poultry.
 New Shade Tree Post.—That beautiful and graceful shade tree, the white birch, which decorates so many parks and home lawns, has been attacked by very destructive insect enemy in our State. For several years past some of the finest specimens of this tree in Buffalo's parks have died each year. The cause of this is that the cause was a small, slender beetle, whose grub makes tortuous tunnels just beneath the bark. To scientists the insect was known as the "white bark borer," but we speak of it as the birch Agrilus.
 "I have, as yet, no better suggestion to offer than to cut down and burn immediately every tree that may be in the spring, all trees found infested. I doubt if any protective wax for the trees will be found practicable for this pest."—Frederic W. Silland, before the W. N. Y. Hort. Society.
 Water for the Horse.—The quantity of water allowed to horses is often insufficient says Rural World. The water required by animals for nutritive and dehydrating purposes is obtained partly from the drinking water. Green foods and roots contain a good deal of water—as much as may be 90 per cent—and animals getting these foods require to drink less, but the staple foods of the horse, oats and hay, contain no more than from 14 to 36 per cent of moisture, and on this dry food horses should, unless under special and very peculiar circumstances, be a free allowance.—Ex.

Advantages of Soiling.
 Soiling possesses to many advantages over pasturage, especially where dairymen on high priced land is contemplated, that every dairymen should carefully study the question of soiling the system. A good deal depends upon the supply, character, and cost of labor at the farmer's command. It may be profitable to practice partial soiling, and experiments have demonstrated that by feeding cows entirely on green forage crops in the stable, from two to five times as much milk will result per acre, as from pasturing the same land. It was an old saying that the cow tramped three times as much as she ate. Of course, many farms possess considerable proportions of pasture land that cannot be tilled, but for tillable land, the profit in soiling is very great. Many more cows can be kept on a given area and the productive capacity of the land can be rapidly increased. The saving of manure and its application to best advantage is one of the great gains in soiling. But for this system of feeding little calculation is required, and a variety of green crops is necessary to present a well arranged succession throughout the growing season. In other words there must be no break; the supply must be certain and ample. The careful and experienced dairymen will gain experience in raising as much of every crop as he expects to use. The surplus will not be wasted; it can be dried or stored in a silo. It is stored on good quality by the soiling system well maintained, one acre of productive land will feed two cows for five or six months; three acres for five cows is considered a conservative estimate. The time of excessive soiling, however, he not overlooked. One of the points gained by the soiling is the saving of food required through the life of the cow. In the autumn, in securing its food at pasture. Moderate exercise should accompany soiling, and a small pasture lot should be provided convenient to the cow house.—Ex.

 Mr. W. H. Hays, who has been recently re-elected treasurer of the Baltimore and Annapolis Railroad, has been in the employ of the company for forty-six years, and has been treasurer since 1870. When a small boy in Baltimore he saw the great parade that Baltimoreans arranged to celebrate the laying of the cornerstone of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on July 4, 1828.
 The Buddhists in Ceylon are now energetically preaching the new doctrine of the world will come this year, with the result that the faithful see that it would be mere waste of time to grow rice or in any way provide for the wants of next year, and are instead giving their minds seriously to a pilgrimage to Anuradhapura. At the present time European residents in Ceylon are finding that nothing but a poor substitute for ration and the outlook for the future is sad indeed. Next year the pilgrims of Jody will be looking out for help, and the government, for there will be famine in the land.

 What More Was Found.
 That the Japanese consular called whale meat a delicacy would appear to be proved by the quantities of it purchased. The whales are caught off the coast of Korea, the blubber and flesh cut up, salted and sent to Japan for sale as food. Over 2,000,000 pounds of whale meat were imported into Japan last year.

"You Never Miss the Water Till the Well Runs Dry."
 We never realize the value of health until it is gone. When old time strength and vigor are waning, purify the blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla; soon restored to perfect health, study never even temper will prove it is bringing back the glow of perfect health.

Declining an Obituary.
 The Aroostook (Me.) Pioneer prints the following story of Indian shrewdness: Some river-drivers were working on the west branch of the Aroostook. The logs had jammed into a nasty snarl, and no one harkened for the job of going out with a cant-dog to start the key-log. In the crew was an Indian noted for his coolness and skill. The boss finally looked over to his direction. "Coot," he said, "go and break that jam, and I'll see that you get a nice pile in the paper." The redskin looked at the logs and then at the boss. "Dead Injun look nice on paper!" he grinned, and walked away.

The Buddhists in Ceylon are now energetically preaching the new doctrine of the world will come this year, with the result that the faithful see that it would be mere waste of time to grow rice or in any way provide for the wants of next year, and are instead giving their minds seriously to a pilgrimage to Anuradhapura. At the present time European residents in Ceylon are finding that nothing but a poor substitute for ration and the outlook for the future is sad indeed. Next year the pilgrims of Jody will be looking out for help, and the government, for there will be famine in the land.

Chicago restaurants announce a general rise in the prices of steaks, and it will soon become almost as expensive to eat a sirloin in Chicago as to take a debutante and her chaperon to hear grand opera. The public will stand the added tax on meat with uncomplaining fortitude, but an increase in the price of pig would rouse a spirit of rebellion that might stop at nothing. Best we furnish both the brass and silver of Americans, but pig is dear to every patriotic heart, and a gleam far awaits the man who lifts its price or disturbs its size.

The suit brought by the United States against the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railroad company to set aside the road's title to the land grant in Allen and Nessho counties has been decided in the Federal court in session at Leavenworth, Kan. The land in litigation amounted to more than 1,000,000 acres, the aggregate value of which is about $15,000,000. After hearing the arguments, Judge Hook decided that title to lands held by the railroad is to be retained, but the title in Allen county.

A dispatch from Laramie, Wyo., announces that out of a party of 100 scientists who went geologizing in the neighboring mountains some weeks ago only twelve remain faithful to their rock-chipping mission, the other eighty-eight having scattered out with kodaks and devoted their whole time to photography. Thus does the camera gain a decisive triumph over the hammer and the developed negative outweigh the finest fossil. Kodak practice may not bring results of wonderful value to the world of paleontologists, but it is apparently more fun than burrowing in the strata of an alkali valley.

Liberal aid for the destitute people of Porto Rico, 100,000 of whom are said to be without homes or food as the result of the recent hurricane, will be a most effective way of showing the natives of our tropical possessions that they were truly fortunate when they came beneath the shadows of the American flag. Prompt and properly administered relief to the 1,500,000 Porto Ricans that the American people means not only impartial justice, but kindness, charity and interest in the welfare of all the native people, will ally much discontent, ease any casual friction and give the new additions to our census table a better understanding of America and Americans than has yet been presented.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

"HEALTH RESORTS." THE SUBJECT LAST SUNDAY.

"A Poet That is Called in the Hebrew Tongue Bethesda, Having Five Pools, Where Lay a Great Multitude of Impotent Folk." John v, 2, 3.

Outside the city of Jerusalem there was a fine watering-place, the popular resort for invalids. To this day there is a dry basin of rock which shows that there may have been a pool there three hundred and sixty feet long, one hundred and thirty feet wide, and seventy-five feet deep. This pool was surrounded by five piazzas, or porches, or bathing houses, and the patients tarried until the time when they were to step into the water. So far as reinvigoration was concerned, it must have been a Saratoga and a Long Branch on a small scale, a Leaning Tower and a Brighton combined—medical and pleasure institutions.

At a certain season of the year there was an officer of the government who would go down to that water and pour in it some healing quality, and after long and painful waiting, and some of the multitude; and I prefer the plain statement of Scripture, that at a certain season an angel came down and stirred up or troubled the water; and those who were afflicted with rheumatism, neuralgia and splenic diseases, go and are cured by the thousands. These blessed Bethesda are scattered all up and down our country.

We are at a season of the year when all the same institutions has come up under different names; and it is called a "summer meeting," almost suggestive of positive religious exercises. And it is called an "agricultural fair," suggestive of everything that is improving in the art of farming. But under these deceptive titles are the same cheating and the same letting and the same drunkenness and the same vagabondage of everything that is improving in the art of farming. But under these deceptive titles are the same cheating and the same letting and the same drunkenness and the same vagabondage of everything that is improving in the art of farming.

Another watering-place has come up nearly all our watering-places in the horse-racing business. We all admire the horse, but we do not think that the horse is the best thing that we ought to be expending our human degradation. The horse race is not of such important health as the human race. The Bible intimates that a man is better than a sheep, and I suppose he is better than a horse, though, like Job's stallion, his neck be clothed with thunder. Horse races in olden times were under the ban of Christian people; and in our day the same institution has come up under different names; and it is called a "summer meeting," almost suggestive of positive religious exercises. How Shall I Manage to Save?

The problem of how to save is a constant study and to most people the question is never solved and anyone who can offer any help along this line must be accepted as a friend. What man's salary is small, he finds after the meat and grocery bills are settled that he has very little left to buy clothing, let alone putting a few dollars in the bank, and when the holiday season arrives he finds it almost impossible to get a few little souvenirs of the good Christmas tide for wife and the babies. To such as find it hard we believe we have not heard a better proposition than that made by Anderson & Norvall of this city. This firm is giving a five-cent coupon with every one-dollar purchase which practically makes every dollar's worth of goods purchased at their store cost you but ninety-five cents. These coupons will be accepted as cash in payment on any article in their holiday stock. This offer makes it possible for you to buy at least a few of the Christmas presents with what you save on your grocery bill by giving them your trade.

We wish to call your attention to an article which appeared in last week's issue of THE COURIER under the caption, "How Shall I Manage to Save?" which we have requested the editor to republish. We wonder if you realize what a neat sum you can save on your grocery bill at 5c on the dollar? Suppose your bill is $12 per week, in four weeks will have $48.40 in coupons worth $4.00, with which to make good the hoards of the little ones at Christmas time. Give us your trade for the next four months and see how well pleased you will be with our goods and prices. Yours for mutual benefit.

ANDERSON & NORVALL.
